

HE

MONTHLY MISCELLANY,

FOR

N E,

SNAIL. LIFE OPINIONS of and

HE day was fultry, and I T chose to evade the scorching beams of the sun, by sauntering along a shady walk, where an impenetrable hedge of yew intercepted his more ardent rays, and the gently-waving branches of the alders, here and there planted on the oppolite fide, caused an artificial breeze, that foothed the fancy, while it allayed the fervour of the heat. At the end of this walk was a most beautiful arbour .-Nature seemed to have directed her favourite woodbines to climb up the arched roof of this sweet recess, and there hanging in artless festoons to shed their most delicious balms. The jessamine too intermixed her light foliage, and her filver blossoms emitted the most delicate odours; while the more blooming rose seemed to vie with both, in beauty and fragrance.

AY, 22. RN. Gall. Beans 3 0

3 7

3 2

Big. 12

oke.

flock,

ith Sea

to new

o conf. r cent.

g & per

, 90 $.

rokers,

lothorne.

9

Allured by these united sweets, I entered, and fat down on the verdant turf that was raised within; and being fatigu'd with the heat, reclined in a musing posture. Casting my eyes around, I perceived a SNAIL, that thrust its long and white neck out of the finest-coloured

MISCELL. VOL. III.

shell I had ever beheld. Its delicate transparent horns waved gently as it moved, and feem'd placed there as centinels to give warning of approaching

I stretched forth my hand, took it up, and being always fond of these little animals, laid it upon my arm, where it glided along, as though in fearch of a more fuitable afylum. I began to confider what were the conceptions of these creatures; whether they had any complex, or even simple ideas; whether they had the fensations of fear, or recollection of evil; and whether they had the passions of human kind, fuch as love, hate, gratitude, and refentment, &c. &c. But the apparent impossibility of ever attaining a perfect knowledge of these points, threw a damp on my spirits; and becoming dull and languid, I at last fell from my reverie into a profound fleep.

Scarce had I closed my eyes, when methought the little animal on my arm spoke in articulate founds, and addressed itself to me in the following words:

" Be not furprized to hear one of the reptile tribe speak as in a human voice;

17

of

wi

Y

ex

the

an ye

ad

he (n ref

fho

ne

cat

he ma

wi

20

T

nu

the

the all

ne

qu his

int

of

per clo

un

for op bu

thi

he

to

Wi

on ren

fin

yc

ab

fee

07 ga ha

the lia

me

I

W

aiı

fin

gra in

ite

ing me

me

I attempted to answer the little creature, by talking of subtle affections and antipathies, and shudderings, and creepings, and nervous systems,—withing to find an excuse for this trifling weakness, so often met with among the Fine Ladies of my own, and the Delicatissmos of the other sex. But in vain was all my rhetoric; the poor Snail would not be reasoned out of its rationality; and I was obliged to acknowledge, by my filence, that all the refined subtleties of argument were not a match for the plain and sober dictates of pure uncorrupted nature.

Willing to change the subject, I asked the Snail in what manner he paffed his time? and what part of the garden was its birth-place? "I was produced (faid he) among the leaves of a peach tree, and only escaped the merciless hands of the gardener, by the minuteness of my fize; but my mother, who was larger than I am now, was destroyed by an horrible crush. The found of it still thunders in my ear; and I have ever since fought a low station, as the best fecurity from danger. Yet notwithstanding this precaution, I had like to have been executed by the hand of the same destroyer. I was fliding foftly along the leaf of a strawberry plant, in order to regale my-felf with a few drops of dew, which having fallen the preceding night on that rich fruit, were become more delicately fweet than even the fruit itself. Thus gliding on, careless of approaching evil, I was feized by the hand of that rude spoiler; when instantly I heard the voice of the tender-hearted Amelia, who called out to him not to hurt fuch an innocent, -- fuch a harmless wanderer. He would have expostulated with her; and faid a great deal about the destruction of his fruit, and the injury that all of our species did to the young feedlings. She would not fuffer him to proceed, but taking me between her foft fingers, she reprieved me from his unjust sentence, and carrying me into this arbour, laid me gently down. I had withdrawn into my shell at the first found of the gardener's feet, but finding myself under the protection of my benefactress, I ventured out, and bending my neck, and stretching out my horns, to shew my gra-titude, I strove to kis the soft hand that had faved me from destruction .feemed to understand my wishes, and laying me on her arm- Yes, little unoffending animal, faid the, I will preferve thee from this danger; thou shalt live out thy little life, and fulfil the end of thy creation; live then, and eat freely of the produce of my garden; that Providence which fent thee here, will amply provide for all thy wants; and when thou and all thy species are supplied, there will still remain a fufficient portion for me and mine. I would have thanked her for her unmerited goodness, but hearing the found of her dear Leander's feet, the haftily laid me down, and turned to meet him, with a heart replete with love and kind affections; -for furely they alone know how to love, who have their hearts melted with the warm beams of benevolence; nor can that bosom be faid to feel the tender passion, that can for a moment with that the smallest part of the creation should fuffer pain. She was repaid by the tender careffes of her fond partner, and fitting down where you are now, they entered into a most improving and delightful conversation. Since that time, I fcarcely pass a day without coming here, with the hope of meeting them; and I never have that fatisfaction, without being at once made happier and wifer .-They read and chat alternately, intermingling the kindest expressions of regard; and by liftening to them, I am taught more knowledge than I could attain, were I to travel the whole ten years that is allowed to be the general term we Snails are suffered to creep upon the earth."

Hearing the Snail talk of travelling, "pray, (faid I) how far have your peregrinations ever extended?" "Not far, (faid he) for when we once find a fertile and well cultivated spot, there we fix.—Gardens are our cities, and trees and slower-beds our neighbourhoods. But could we be contented to live in fields and hedges, though our diet might be plainer, yet should we be more fecure; and confequently, having less evil to apprehend, be a great deal more happy. But who knows what is most for their advantage? and knowing it, who follows the dictates

UNE

o this had ound

nyfelf efs, I

, and gra-

that

-She and le uneferve

ve our

of thy of the idence

rovide

ind all

II fill

ne and

er for ng the e haft-

ve and alone

hearts

enevo-

to feet

noment

reation

by the

er, and

hey en-delight-time, I ng here, and I

out be-

, inter-

of ren, I am

ould aten years

term we pon the avelling,

our pere-

Not far,

a fertile

ve fix.-

ees and

s. But ields and plainer,

and con-

prehend,

But who vantage?

e dictates

er.

of Nature, if they happen to interfere with their present passions and desires ?-Yet think not that some of us have not experience, and wisdom too, to correct their errors. There is here at present an ancient Sage, who has past his eleventh year; he came from the farthest end of the adjoining field, and having in his youth heard of the productions of this garden, (not then in the possession of Amelia) he resolved that no expence of time or pains fould prevent his undertaking the journey. What will not industry and application effect! In the space of fix summers he gained the bottom of the garden; and making his way through a close hedge, he with incredible pains and fatigue became an inhabitant of this improvement .-Two fummers has he spent in tracing the numberless windings of its paths, feeling the foftness of its grass-plats, and tasting the variety of its fruits. Yet now, after all his refearches, he declares that happiness can only be found in the unfrequented vale; and advises us to re-trace his steps, assuring us, that the calm, uninterrupted tranquility which is the refult of liberty and fecurity, will amply recompence the trouble of piercing through the closest hedge, and the sweet purity of the untainted air will make sufficient amends for the few dainties not to be found in the open fields .- He would himself return, but age and infirmities confine him to this spot; and every rising and setting sun he laments his temerity that drew him into this region. However, few, if any, will liften to his wife admonitions; not one has ever yet been tempted to feek barren liberty, at the price of luxurious confinement; and, like the patriots amongst you, we find the theory vaftly more agreeable than the practice, especially if our feeming interest interferes,--For my own part, I fould certainly leave this garden, were it not that I have here the happiness and advantage of listening to the wife Leander, and his beloved Amelia; while he teaches her, he instructs me; and with a kind of conscious pride I strive to emulate his sweet scholar .-Whilft they are converfing, methinks the air breathes a fresher fragrancy, the birds fing a sweeter note, and every blade of grass feels softer to my touch."

The good Snail would have proceeded in his rapturous praises of his two favourites, but I interrupted him by remarking, that although I had heard him often mention his ideas of hearing, tasting, feeling, and smelling, yet had he never once mentioned the faculty of seeing. "How fhould I? (faid he) I understand not what it means. If it be a fense, none of our species are endued with it; nor do I comprehend what it can possibly be." began to explain it to him; but being obliged to make use of the words light, shade, colour, objects, optics, &c. I found that, instead of giving him infor-mation, I was only leading myself into a wilderness, confusing his ideas, and burthening his comprehension with terms he could not possibly understand. " I find (faid he) this is a mystery which Providence has not thought proper to unveil to us Snails; I will therefore rest satisfied, and enquire no farther." 'Do you then doubt (faid I) of there being fuch a fense?' 'No; (said the honest Snail) " No; (faid the honest Snail) I hear you fay there is; I have, belides, heard my kind protectress, and her beloved Leander, speak in such a manner, that I cannot disbelieve it; nor indeed is there the least reason I should; for altho my weak comprehension cannot expand itself, so as to receive full conviction from t'a demonstrations you offer, yet is there nothing in it politively against my reason, or contradictory to my other I will therefore wait until that fenfes. period shall arrive, when all Snails shall be taught to understand the doctrine of light and vision," 'What, (faid I) do you then believe that you are to be favoured with a future existence?" "Why not? (faid he) Who has taught you that the spirit of life can be ever annihilated? We may sleep until the end of the world, as you may; and altho' not being endued with the faculty of finning, as you are, we can claim no reward for our virtues, which are at best but mere negatives; yet, as we cannot possibly offend, fo we may awake-not to tafte that fupreme happiness designed for your species, but to enjoy the calm, uninterrupted delight of wandering through the flowery paths and delicate groves of that paradife from which we are now expelled."

'Pray, (faid I) fince you could not possibly offend, how came you to leave the Garden of Eden?' "We have a tradition, (he replied) that when your first parents were driven from thence, a couple of us Snails happened to be sticking to the fig-leaves of which Eve had woven a covering; and she, not being quite so squeamish as your modern sine ladies, was no ways offended at our proximity, and very courteously (we thank her for her pains) carried us with her. We have likewise a tradition, that before

Gg 2

thag

JUNE

1775 down Emul

our re

Th fubje&

ferrec

furely by th

its fa accor

leaft mind

wher

by fe and I all t

will penfi

of g

an e

his e his evid

thou WOI

for whi

lad

the us

fou im

par

fur

cal

fch

fpi

ne

inf

be en

im

or fr

ar in fu be m

in

I

E ther

that expulsion, we Snails had the sense of feeing; but being found in bad company, we underwent our share of the punish-

I was going to answer my little communicative friend, when the dinner-bell ringing, I was awaked from the most entertaining dream that I had ever had in my life.

Worcester. HEBE.

*****

For the MISCELLANY.

THOUGHTS, PHILOSOPHICAL

(Not thro' DERISION, but by the way of NOVELTY)

Introduced to the READER, in the Drefs of HUMOUR.

HE Devil, when tempting Christ, must have been a fool to expect to fucceed, and the more so to think, that offering to the Lord of the world that dominion of it which feveral (comparatively mere worldlings) would despise,-would effect his purpose.

We have no cause to think highly of human nature, since the oracles of wisdom and truth affure us, that man is no more than a wild afs's colt.

Who knows but that prosperity and advertity prove fometimes the re-rie of what the world efteem them; in which case 'tis obvious that adversity is prosperity, and prosperity adversity.

I apprehend, instead of money, the Apoftle meant to fay, that "Woman is the root of all evil;" for certainly, next to the devil, woman was the original root of all evil. Mischief was first engendered betwixt the devil and the woman; that is to fay, the devil is the father, and woman the mother of mischief.

Carry to their utmost latitude the arguments used by those who censure a mutual exchange of the products and commodities of different countries with each other, and we may farther infer, that because our meat was not fent ready roafted, it was intended that we should eat it raw; that fince liquors don't fpring, it was meant that we should not drink any; and that, because we are not born cloathed, we were doubtless defigned to go naked.

It is, perhaps, in a great measure owing to the inconfiftence and abfurdity of human prayers, that they are fo feldom fulfilled. For instance, a band of courtiers, in adoring God with as little fincerity as they homage their prince, are all at once imploring the possession of a va-cant finecure, which it is impossible that more than one can enjoy: or the traveller is found petitioning heaven that the weather may continue fair during his journey, at the same time that the husbandman folicits rain to fertilize his ground: In fhort, too generally each prays for the gratification of his own defires, without confidering whether they are compatible with that universal good to which the operations of Providence always tend.

How vain is the glory of the Conqueror! for in the midst of his exaltation at having subdued half our ant-bill; whilft mad with ambition, he is planning the conquest of the remaining part, Death plucks him from his throne, crushes him betwixt his fingers, and limits his ambition to a few square feet of ground at

'Tis best for us always to be prepared for death, least at any time he should take us napping.

AJAX.

***************

.The BOOK-WORM, an OCCASIONAL PAPER;

NUMBER VII.

MULATION, when the object of it is virtuous, and the measure not excessive, has always been placed among the laudable exertions of human powers. It is indeed the most certain road to excellence in art, learning, politeness, virtue, and even religion. We are indebted to it, in a great degree, for all that is quoted, as example, for our imitation in every purfuit. From the Epic Poet, down to the Ballad-finger, we owe to Emulation whatever is most worthy of our remembrance and efteem.

There has been much dispute on the subject of Education, which is to be preferred, the public or the private. But surely the motives of Emulation afforded by the former, ought to determine us in its favour. The examples of vice which accompany those of Emulation, are the least prevalent on those youths, whose minds are fixed on excellence: and where the inclination is more attracted by sensuality and pleasure, than the arts and sciences, it may be doubted whether all the restraints of a private education will be sufficient to give it another propensity.

Even in mechanic arts, we chuse rather to put a boy apprentice to a master of great business, than to one who, tho an excellent workman himself, has only his own particular example to set before his young pupil. And the reason is evident; the master of large business, though perhaps he shews none of his own work, exhibits a great variety of the performances of others employed by him, which become objects of Emulation to a lad of good parts and diligence.

If we ask the soldier, who has faced all the dangers of his profession, he will tell us how much he has been animated, and found his natural courage and fortitude improved, by the fight of fo many companions engaged in the fame toils, and furrounded by the fame dangers. We call the Houles of Parliament, the great schools of patriotism, because in them the spirit of liberty, and love of our country, speaks without controul on all national subjects. Even the private virtue of beneficence hath fometimes been awakened in a breast little used to compassion, when instances of great and noble charity have been shewn by others, whom they were emulous, if not of equalling, at least of imitating.

Thus far I have considered Emulation on the virtuous side; and it were to be wished that the present age was more fruitful in examples of this kind.

To view the other fide of the picture, and to examine into the power of example in vicious pursuits, would be rather unfuitable to my present purpose, and might better become a declaimer against the immorality of the times.

We are furnished with a remarkable instance of Emulation in the following Tale of Mr. A. Phillips's.

The NIGHTINGALE and PEASANT.

WHEN shepherds flourish'd, in Eliza's reign,

There liv'd, in high-repute, a jolly fwain,
Young Colin Clout; who well could pipe and fing,

And by his notes invite the lagging spring.
He, as his custom was, at leifure laid
In woodland bower, without a rival play'd, Soliciting his pipe to warble clear,
Enchantment sweet, as ever wont to hear Belated Waysarers, from wake or fair
Detain'd by music hovering on in air:
Drawn by the magic of the inticing sound,
What troops of mute admirers flock around!
The steerlings left their food; and creatures, wild

By nature form'd, infenfibly grew mild.

He makes the gathering birds about him throng.

throng, And loads the neighbouring branches with his fong:

There, with the crowd, a Nightingale of fame, Jealous, and fond of praife, to liften came; She turn'd her ear, and paufe by paufe, with pride.

Like echo to the shepherd's pipe reply'd. The Shepherd heard with wonder, and again, To try her more, renew'd his various frain, To all the various strains she plies her throat, And adds peculiar grace to every note. If Colin in complaining accent grieve, Or brisker motion to his measure give, If gentle founds he modulate, or firong, She, not a little vain, repeats the fong; But so repeats, that Colin half despised His pipe and skill, around the country priz'd; And—" sweetest songster of the winged kind, What thanks, faid he, what praises shall I find To equal thy melodious voice? In thee The rudeness of my rural life I fee; From thee I learn no more to vaunt my skill." Aloft in air she sate provoking still The vanquish'd swain. Provok'd, at last,

he strove
To shew the little minstrel of the grove
His utmost powers, determin'd once to try
How art, exerting, might with nature vie;
For none could vie with either in their part,
With her in nature, or with him in art.
He draws in breath, his rising breast to fill;
Throughout the wood his pipe is heard to fhrill;

From note to note, in hafte, his fingers fly;

Still more and more the numbers multiply;

And now they trill, and now they fall and rife,

And fwift and flow they change, with fwest furprize,

Attentive the doth scarce the sounds retain;
But to herself first conns the puzzling strain,
And tracing, heedful, note by note repays.
The shepherd, in his own harmonious lays;
Through every changing cadence runs at length,

And adds in fweetness what she wants in strength.

Then Colin threw his pipe difgrac'd afide, While she loud triumph sings, proclaiming wide r-bell oft en-

***

S,

BE.

ned to re owdity of feldom f courfinceare all f a vaole that raveller ne weais jourifbandround: for the without ich the end. conqueation at whilk ing the Death hes him s ambiound at orepared

uld take

****

ess, virindebted It hat is tation in ic Poet, down

177 well

vine

may tion

and con

whi fible with valt

mat

alfo

as t par

wh:

and

peti

the

mif

path

tra

fpa ext

upo

pro

wit

wh

the mi

did pla

the

CO

fur

im

bu

28 w

th

w

th

CO

A

ch

on br

na

la

B

238

Her mighty conquest, and within her throat
Twils many a wild unimitable note,
To foil her rival. What could Colin more?
A little harp of Maple-ware he bore;
The little harp was old, but newly strung,
Which, usual, he across his shoulders hung.
"Now take, delightful bird, my last farewell,
He faid, and learn from hence thou dost excel
No trivial artist:" and anon he wound
The mutmuring strings, and order'd every found;

Then earnest to his instrument he bends, And both hands pliant on the strings extends; His touch the strings obey, and various move, The lower answering still to those above; His singers, restless, traverse to and fro, As in pursuit of harmony they go: Now, slightly skimming, o'er the strings they pass, Like winds, which gently brush the plying

While melting airs arise at their command:
And now, laborious, with a weighty hand,
He finks into the chords, with folemn pace,
To give the swelling tones a bolder grace;
And now the left, and now by turns the right
Each other chace, harmonious both in flight:
Then his whole fingers blend a swarm of founds,

Till the sweet tumult through the harp refounds.

Ceafe, Colin, ceafe, thy rival ceafe to vex; The mingling notes, alas! her ear perplex: She warbles, diffident, in hope and fear,
And hits imperfect accents here and there,
And fain would utter forth fome double tone;
When foon the falters, and can utter none,
Again the tries, and yet again the fails;
For ftill the harp's united power prevails.
Then Colin play'd again, and, playing, fung;
She, with the fatal love of glory ftung,
Hears all in pain: her heart begins to fwell:
In piteous notes the fighs, in notes which tell
Her bitter anguith: he, ftill finging, plies
His limber joints: he forrows higher rife,
How thall the bear a cong'ror, who, before,
No equal through the grove in music bore?
She droops, the hangs her flagged wings, the moans.

moans,
And fetcheth from her breaft melodious groans.

Opprefs'd with grief at laft, too great to quel,
Down, breathlefs, on the guilty harpshe sell,
Then Colin loud lamented o'er the dead,
And unavailing tears prosusely shed,
And broke his wicked strings, and curs'd his skill;

And best to make atonement for the ill, (If for such ill atonement might be made) He builds her tomb beneath a laurel shade; Then adds a verse, and sets with flow'rs the ground,

And makes a fence of winding offers round,
"A verfe and tomb is all I now can give;
And here thy name at leaft, he faid, shall

•••••••••••••••••

For the MISCELLANY.

The STUDIES of ASTRONOMY and PHILOSOPHY RECOMMENDED.

THE fciences of Astronomy and Philosophy are studies, next to that of ourselves, the most worthy of cultivation, on account of the grand scenes they display, and the losty ideas they transimit, of the power, the wisdom, and the goodness of the great Creator.

These sciences have, in all ages and countries flourishing in arts and politeness, engaged the attention of the curious, employed the pens of the most eloquent orators, and embellished the writings of the poets of the most elevated genius.

As to the first of these sciences,—the Astronomer has for the subject of his speculations the whole universe of material beings; he considers the nature of matter in general, and enquires by what laws the several parts of it act upon each other; but his thoughts are more particularly employed in investigating the nature of those great bodies that compose the visible system of the universe, which in common speech are comprehended under the appellation of the Sun, Moon, and Stars. Those unacquainted with this sublime science, have no greater ideas of the Stars, than as a multitude of bright spangles dropped over the ætherial blue. They conceive no other of these fine appearances, than of their being so many golden studs, with which the Empyrean Arch is decorated. But studious minds, that carry a more accurate and strict enquiry among these celestial lights, bring back advice of the most attonishing import, concerning their beautiful order, and the laws which govern them; which loudly proclaim the infinite wisdom of the divine Architect, in thus disposing of the matter with which the Universe is composed.

There is indeed no part of the Creation but what displays the wisdom, goodness and power of the Great First Cause to an attestive mind; but the Heavens in a most emphatical manner "declare the glory of God," and are nobly eloquent of the Deity, as ell

[June well as t ar, there, ble tone; none.

vails.
g, fung;
g, o fwell:
hich tell plies
r rife, efore,

bore? ings, the elodious to quell,

fhe fell, dead, ars'd his ill, ade) fhade; w'rs the round. ve; d, shall

****

PHY

fublime e Stars, pangles They golden Arch is at carry among vice of which which him the chitect, which reation lefs and n attenempha-God," city, as well as the most magnificent heralds of their Maker's praise; so that in this divine book of creation the most unlettered may find enough to excite their admiration and praise.

By a little knowledge in this pleafing and wonderful science, we are enabled to contemplate that magnificent œconomy which pois'd the stars with fuch inexpreffible nicety, and meted out the heavens with a span; where all is prodigiously raft, surprisingly various, yet more than mathematically true. By Astronomy we also learn to consider those golden luminaries in the heavens, which appear but as twinkling flames, to be in fact prodigious bodies, and as many funs to fo many fystems, each accompanied with its particular planetary equipage; therefore what a multiplicity of mighty spheres and worlds, unknown to us, must be perpetually running their various rounds in the immense regions of space; yet none mistake their way, nor wander from the paths assigned them; and though they travel through trackless and unbounded space, yet none fly from their orbs into extravagant excursions,-none press in upon their center with too near an approach, but all their revolutions proceed with eternal harmony, keeping fuch time, and observing such laws, as are most exquifitely adapted to the perfection of the whole.

How aftonishingly capacious must be the expanse which yields room for those mighty globes, and their widely-diffused operations? "To what mighty lengths did the Almighty Architect stretch his line, when he measured out the stupendous platform?" Inconceivable extent! swallows up our thoughts. Where are the pillars that support this grand majestic concave of the fky? How is that immeafurable arch upheld, unshaken, and unimpaired, while fo many generations of buly mortals have funk and disappeared, as bubbles upon the stream? The stars, which are fuch prodigious bulks, how are they fastened in their lofty fituations? by what miracle in mechanics are so many thousand pond'rous orbs preserved from collision, or striking against each other? Are they hung in golden or adamantine chains? Rest they their enormous load on rocks of marble, or on columns of brass? It is the Almighty Fiat that has breathed upon it, and hath thus animated nature with those wonderful principles or laws of projection and attraction, by which this mighty fabric is supported; the latter the all-combining cement, the former the ever-operating spring. Tis by the mighty power of attraction that the vast worlds of matter hang self-balanced on their own centers, and the orbs of prodigious bulk, yet require nothing but this amazing property for their support and continuance.

Thus by means of the projectile impulse on one hand, and the attractive energy on the other, being both most nicely proportioned, and under the immediate operation of the Deity, the various globes run their radiant races without the least interruption or deviation, so as to produce the alternate changes of day and night, the pleasing vicifiitudes of the seasons, the flux and reflux of the tides, (so useful to navigators) and a thousand others.

Let us then adore, with a reverential awe, that great and glorious Being, whose word gave birth to universal nature, and endued it with these furprizing properties; that incomprehensible Being, who is perfect in knowledge, mighty in power,—whose name, whose nature, and operations, are great and marvellous, who summons into being, with equal ease, a single atom, or ten thousand worlds.

He fees with equal eye, as Lord of all, A hero perith, or a fparrow fall: Atoms or fystems into ruin hurl'd, And now a bubble burst, and now a world.

Are our thoughts raifed to admiration at this small sketch of nature? How then must we be lost in amazement at the confideration of the Creator himself, who is so far exalted above these his glorious works, that he looks far down on these dazzling spheres, and "sees the summit of Creation as in a vale," so great that this prodigious extent of space is but as a point in his presence, and all this consumerce of worlds, compared with his own glory, as the lightest atom that suchuses in air, and sports in the meridian ray.

Hail, fovereign Goodnefs! all productive mind;
On all thy works thyfelf inferib'd we find;
How various all! how variously endu'd!
How great their number, and each part how good!

How perfect then must the Great Parent.

shine,

Who with one act of energy divine,

Laid the vast plan, and finish'd the design. J ____, Wilts.

W

177 cent in fe

tue, virtu

and lotte indi

on l fpair man

this in th in v

thus men guil

even or a

To the Editors of the Monthly Miscellany.

GENTLEMEN.

Observing in your last MONTHLY MISCELLANY, some judicious REFLECTIONS on ELECTION and REPROBATION, I have taken the liberty of sending you, at an Addition to what their sensible Writer has alledged, a sew cursory Thoughts, which occurred to me some time since, upon the same subject, on seing a question relative to PREDESTINTION proposed by the Members of a Disputing Club. I have not made any reference to Scripture, from whence this stated doctrine is said to originate; not beweetaken into consideration the various arguments which have been offered in support or consistent of it; but have consined my speculations to one point,—that of its repugnance to moral justice.

I am yours, Sc.

Rochester.

B.

THE inquisitive curiosity of man, by tempting him to discover the causes of effects, often involves him in a labyrinth of thought, from which he can, with difficulty, extricate himself. It is this propenfity which animates him in a vain attempt of explaining all the phænomena and events that happen both in the natural and moral world. To vindicate the ways of God to man, by physical deductions, is an endeavour which frequently betrays imbecility and arrogance. In the course of such enquiries, propositions will be ftarted, which tend only to perplex the mind, instead of informing it; which in themselves are of no essential importance, and which in their own nature are too abstruse for mental disquifition.

There are certain theological mysteries, which it is impossible for the human mind to comprehend; and, even if clearly comprehended, can promote neither the interests of Religion, nor Virtue. Such mysteries, therefore, should be contemplated with veneration; because every attempt to demonstrate and define, what the reason of man can never understand, ferves only to advance the cause of fcepticism and infidelity. When the enemies of Revelation perceive, that its warmest advocates implicitly give their affent to tenets, which they endeavour to explain, but cannot, they are from thence tempted to conclude, that the whole fystem is involved in the same difficulties and uncertainty, and that the whole is the work of human invention .-It is impossible for man to reduce the proceedings of Providence to any established axioms or principles; for he knows not, neither is it necessary that he should know, by what laws the Deity governs the world. Attempts of this kind have given birth to very dangerous doctrines, and, amongst these, that of Predestination is the most conspicuous; a doctrine, which, having been much promulgated of late by modern fanatics, it is the duty of every man, whenever he has an opportunity, to oppose; because it strikes at the very root of Religion and Morality, and tends to undermine all civil institutions whatever.

Allowing that the Deity comprehends, in one view, the past, the present, and the future, yet is it possible for finite reason to discover what effect this prescience has upon moral actions; or to reconcile it to the free-will of man? To admit of Predestination, is to destroy the freedom of the will; but without this operation of the will, there can be no morality in human actions. Upon this principle, the criminal who is executed for the crimes he has committed, must be acquitted of all moral turpitude, and be confidered as fuffering from political motives only, -as fuffering for the preservation and good order of fociety, because he acted from impulsive and irrefiftible necessity. This, among other innumerable instances which might be mentioned, serves to prove what inconfiftencies must refult from the admission of this doctrine; the dangerous tendency thereof appears from the following consi-

Absolute Predestination precludes the idea of a particular Providence; for if all the events of futurity are unalterably fixed, and this chain of things cannot, by any means, be broken, the interposition of any superior Being is not only unnecessary, but of no effect. This then destroys the dependence of the Creature upon the Creator.

Predeftination likewife abolishes that hope and fear, which are the greatest incentives one divis

the jidearage ners difbe their its e

**

froir

A work vinit

ticle
of ti hath nery cove to a bette

befo be o and B

point to in mine M UNE

IONS

u, as

which

ve to le any taken tation

moral

B.

and.

on is hich,

te by every ty, to very tends what-ends.

nd the reason

e has

e it to f Pre-

om of of the uman crimine has

moral Fering

fuffer-

der of ulfive

mong

might ncon-niffion

dency confi-

es the

for if erably

ot, by ofition

unne-

en de-

re ups that eft in-

entives

centives to human actions, and by which, in some measure, is excited a love of virtue, and a detestation of vice. For the virtuous man can have no affurance of a reward, from the conviction that rewards and punishments are indifcriminately allotted, by being pre-ordained to every individual, even before he had determined on his future conduct. What must en-fue from such a notion as this, but de-The vicious fpair, and perhaps fuicide? man, on the other hand, from a belief of this opinion, is emboldened to continue in the same course of sensual gratifications in which he is immerfed. He reasons thus: that if he should meet with punishment, it will not be the confequence of guilt, but of a fortuitous jumble of events, which he could not have altered, or avoided. At the fame time he flatters himself, that, at this very juncture, he is one of the elect, and a chosen vessel of divine favour.

This opinion tends likewise to destroy the peace of civil society, to confound all ideas of right and wrong, and to encourage a most daring licentiousness of manners. For even those men who profess to disbelieve Religion, and endeavour, by their sophistry, to invalidate and weaken its evidences, do yet allow of its utility from a political consideration, from the opinion that a general belief of rewards and punishments to be distributed hereafter, according to the innocency and guilt of men's actions, has no small influence in making them good and peaceable subjects, and in disposing them to exercise all those relative duties, which are the bond and cement of society.

and cement of fociety. Predestination must also superfede the necessity of a future judgment; because mankind are already pre-judged, and their doctrines irrevocably fixed. What confolation then have the wretched and miserable in this life, when all their hopes and expectations of enjoyment in another are groundlefs? When they behold the choicest blessings of this world poured plentifully into the laps of the rich and fortunate, what motives have they for contentment in their present unhappy fi-The good man in diffress has tuation ? been comforted with the affurance, that though his virtue has not met with a reward here, but has rather been perfecuted; whereas, on the other hand, vice has flourished and prospered; yet that there will be a time when all these inequalities shall cease, and the Frovidence of the Supreme Being vindicated from every imputation of injustice. But take away this pleafing expectation, and he is of all men the most miserable.

********************

For the MISCELLANY.

A LETTER from a FATHER to his SON.

Dear Son,

As I find by your enquiry into the character of Bishop Tillotson's works, that you are inclined to read Divinity, so I would by no means discourage you. But as there is hardly one article which is not disputed by one or other of the Christian sects, and as every art hath been used, and abundance of chicanery employed rather to disguise than discover truth; rather to bring people over to a party, or sistem, than to make them better men; so I think it my duty to lay before you such rules as I have found to be of use to myself, in discovering truth, and avoiding error.

Before you look into any controverted point in divinity, it will be proper for you to impress the following things on your mind, viz. That there is a God, the Miscell Vol. III.

Maker and Governor of the Universe; that he is possessed, in an infinite degree, of every moral perfection; that he is happy in himself, and would have been fo eternally, had mankind never existed; that his end in creating rational, moral, and intelligent beings, could be no other than to communicate happiness to them; that as no moral agent can be happy without being virtuous, fo all laws that are of divine original, and come from God, as rules of his creature's conduct, must be of a moral nature, and have a moral tendency,-must be calculated to make men better men ; i. e. to promote every personal or social virtue in them.

These sentiments are no less the discatates of nature, than they are the discoveries of revelation; these are truths to which you should give your affent as a man, as well as you should in the character of 17 are

Hh

for

to 44 fuce

He

cere

nefs

with fam

but to c

of fe

con

one

Flav

age,

Lon

the !

guit

here

her,

train

were able way pine to al

her t nera

Mr.

ble t fhou

ceate

tion

man in a

that will,

fortu

a fev

of gr

M

T

N

1

of a Christian. These are primary principles, which, if all are not agreed in, few, if any, will openly dare to gainfay or dif-

When you meet, therefore, with any disputed article, compare it with, and refer it back to, those truths which are certain and permanent, being supported by reason, and the current testimony of the Bible, and you will foon discover whether the doctrine is of God, or men. For in-Aance, should any author endeavour to impress your mind with the common notion of original fin, i. e. that it was decreed that Adam should sin, and yet that his conduct in eating the forbidden fruit should be culpable or blame-worthy; that all his posterity sinned in him, tho' they had no existence, and that God visits the fins of the fathers on the children, &c .-Compare this doctrine with the moral attributes of God, and the tenor of his word, and you will find it cannot be true; for God, you will remember, is poffeffed of infinite justice, mercy, and benevolence. Ask yourself then, is it consistent with justice (to fay nothing of mercy and kindneis) to punish a perion for that which it was impossible for him to avoid? to punish an innocent youth for the sins of a vicious fire? and let your judgment and conscience answer, making the case your

Again: suppose any author should endeavour to impress upon your mind the doctrine of fubilitation, or that God was fo offended with finful men, that he either could not, or would not, pardon them, upon their repentance and amendment, without first having punished an innocent person, namely, Jefus Christ, in their stead, to make satisfaction for them .-To suppose that the Deity could not pardon fin, is a reflection on his power, and that he would not, on his benevolence and

Try this doctrine by the aforefaid rules, and you will find reason to call the truth of it in question, It certainly cannot be true, if it is inconfiftent with juffice, mercy, and goodness. If it has a bad influence on the morals of mankind, it cannot be of God; which must be the case, when men prefume on the merits of Christ for acceptance and falvation, whilst they pour contempt on moral rightcousness, and the obligations of virtue. A doctrine that contradicts the moral attributes of God, and defeats the chief end of all his laws, must be false; and this you may discover, by trying things doubtful by things which are certain, by observing what concurrence there is between received doctrines and the moral attributes of Deity, and what influence they have on human conduct.

That God is wife, just, and good, in an infinite degree, we are all as certain of as we are of our own existence; that his tender mercies are over all his works; that he has kind, and none but kind defigns to all his rational creatures, we are no less certain of; and confequently when any thing is represented to us under the garb of religion, that either contradicts the general defign of revelation, or is unworthy of his wisdom, justice, or goodness, let it be rejected; for you may be fure it is not of him, fince his kindness extends to the whole creation, and especially to his rational, intelligent creature, Man. Besides, his wisdom will direct, and his goodness dispose him, to promulge fuch laws, and fuch only, as have a direct, natural, and clear tendency to make men morally good, humane, and fociable. For tho' our goodness cannot extend to him, fo as to add to his happiness, yet as the whole of our duty confifts in personal and focial virtues, in imitating him in his moral perfections, all narrow, bigoted, and enthufiastical opinions, which make men morose, censorious, or unsociable, are so far from being a part of religion, that they are the bane and difgrace of it.

Moreover, as God is possessed of all moral excellencies and perfections, fo is he also of all natural ones, and such indeed as are incommunicable to any other being, as felf-existence, omnipresence, omnipotence, &c. and thence we may fairly conclude, there can be but one fuch being, and confequently it necessarily follows, that all fuch doctrines as that contained in the Athanasian Creed are absurd and false, the mere forcery of school-divinity, propagated by the weakness or knavery of gnorant or defigning Priefts. And indeed if you give yourfelf leave to think feriously, and to judge of all doctrines by fuch as you know to be true and certain in their own nature, you will find reason not only to diffent from the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England, but from most of the Creeds, Confessions and Catechisms of all other Churches .advice therefore is, to compare every fentiment you find in every author you read, with what I have before-mentioned to you, and embrace or reject, just as you see they agree or difagree with the reason and nature of things, the moral perfections of the Deity, the fure revelation of the Bible, and the end which all laws that re-

NE

utes

lave

an fas

his

ks;

are ntly

union, e, or may

ineis ipeture,

rect,

ulge

a di-nake

able.

d to et as fonal

n his oted.

make are fo

t they

of all fo is h inother omni-

con-

eing,

lows,

ained

d and inity,

ery of

nd in-think nes by ertain

reafon

-nine

, but

is and

-My

y fen-

read,

ed to ou fee

n and

Etions

of the

vs that are

are divine must necessarily have in view.

—In this call no man master, but judge for yourself, and if you pay a just regard to the aforesaid rules, you cannot err in any degree that may be hurtful to you; you will, indeed, in many things be pretty singular; (a thing I would by no means have you to affect) yet where it is the refult of ferious thought, confideration, and impartial enquiry, I would by no means have you afraid of it. In this case it is no disgrace, but an honour to be singular.

I am, &c.

For the MISCELLANY.

FLAVIA; or, the UNHAPPY DAUGHTER;

A MORAL TALE.

M. Bolton, an eminent merchant in the city of Briftol, by a train of fuccess, gained a very handsome fortune. He was married to a Lady, whom he fincerely loved; and, to add to his happiness, in a few years she presented him with a lovely daughter.

with a lovely daughter.

The naming of a child has in many families occasioned great disturbances; but Mr. Bolton was too kind a husband to cross his wife's inclinations in a matter of so trivial a nature, he therefore readily conferted to her desire, and this little one (the joy of her parents) was called Flavia.

Mis Bolton, when arrived at a proper age, was fent to a boarding-school near London: in a short space of time, none of the scholars eclipsed her at the harpsichord, guittar, or dancing; her beauty, which here shone with meridian lustre, procured her, even in those early days, a numerous train of admirers. These circumstances were construed by her friends into favourable prefages of her future conquests.

Thus Flavia was feemingly in a fure way to obtain the fummit of human happiness, when an accident, which gave rife to all her subsequent misfortunes, caused her to be recalled home, to attend the funeral of her father, who was now dead. Mr. Bolton had been ill for a confiderable time, but lest the knowledge of this flould give his daughter pain, he conceated it from her. That fincere affection which I before observed this gentleman had for his wife, now shewed itself in a very imprudent action; perceiving that his diffolution was near, he made a will, in which he left the whole of his fortune to the disposal of his Lady.

Mrs. Bolton was a young woman; and a few months wore off those impressions of grief, which the death of her husband had occasioned. She began to visit her friends and acquaintances, as usual; she appeared at the Theatre and the Assembly frequently. Picture to yourself, indulgent reader, a widow of five-and-thirty, handsome, and possessed of an independant fortune, to the amount of 15,000l. Can you imagine that such an one would long remain single, without receiving the meas' stattering addresses; without being complimented with the conquest of many a youthful heart, before unwounded; or, in fine, without receiving many offers of marriage?

Mrs. Bolton did not long want them; many fuitors presented themselves, and this unfortunate, or rather imprudent Lady, made choice of the very worst among them. Parmenio proved successful. What was Parmenio? a gamester, a diffinguished character among the ladies of easy virtue; and such a one, as let his fortune be what it would, never failed of making his expences exceed its limits; but then Parmenio was a man of a lively disposition, handsome, gay, and master of a good share of that flattering eloquence, which seldom fails to succeed with the ladies.

The fruits of Mr. Bolton's indulty were now enjoyed by an object as unworthy as he was deferving of them.—Ramenio now gave full fwing to his pleafures; he added feveral uhhappy wretches to his feraglio, appeared more frequently at the gaming table, and plunged deeper into all his beloved excess; and now that Mr. Bolton's conduct in his dying moments was injudicious, is obvious; for behold! Flavia is unprovided for! Parmenio has no affection for her; her mother dies of a broken heart; she is left to the wide world, without a fortune, and without a friend; for her mother's ill conduct deprived her of the friendship of those persons who should have assisted her in this predicament; and brought up only to be a Lady, she is incapable of supporting herself by any kind of laborious, domestic employment.

Hha

Miss Bolton, thus bereft of every hope of support, now turned her thoughts on some place of ease, the falary of which might be sufficient to procure her a substitute. She enquired for such a one among her school-fellows, and as she was beloved by them, a young lady of fortune who had left the school, took her as her companion.

Miss Brown (for that was the name of her new mistress) lived with her brother, a man of levity. He was ftruck with the charms of his fifter's companion, and harboured in his breaft the ungenerous thought of feducing a poor orphan .-This gentleman, in order to effect his vicious purpose, shewed Flavia the utmost kindness and marks of affection; as she had not been prudently educated, her breaft was not fufficiently impregnated with virtue, to support her against the delufive arts of this vile feducer; he made her the constant sharer of his pleasures, whether he went to the Theatre, the Affembly, or his intimates.

These assiduaties to please had the defired effect on the unguarded heart of Miss Bolton; advanced thus far successfully, he now ventured to speak to her in the language of a dinnerested lover. The arties maid gave credit to the artful tale; his first addresses were replete with the repetitions of his honourable intentions; but as he proceeded propitiously, he by degrees flung off his delicacy, and soon dared to talk of the superiority of unrestrained love, over that of shackled matrimony; he proposed a competent settlement, set before her view a false picture of human happiness and grandeur; she was deceived, seduced, ruined; the settlement was not made; happiness she never enjoyed, grandeur was but a vision.—Her mistress was enraged at her conduct, and she was turned again friendless into the wide world.

In this wretched condition she went to London, where she applied for a place at a well-known Register Office; perceiving her to be young and handsome, they sent her to one of those commode ladies, who trassic with beauty, and increase the mifery of the wretched.

In this feminary of vice she was soon laughed out of the little prudence she was possessed of, and persuaded to prostitute her charms to every abandoned libertine, who supplied her exigencies.—In this unhappy way of life she continued, until death, brought on by excesses, removed her from this wretched state.

I leave my judicious, attentive, and thoughtful readers, to make their own comments on this history, well convinced that their serious reflections on it will produce more beneficial effects than the best efforts of my feeble pen.

A. B.

ACCOUNT of that fingular Character, the Chevalier DESCAZEAU;

Known by the Title of the FRENCH POET; who died lately in the FLEET.

[With a STRIKING LIKENESS of that celebrated Genius.]

THIS crazy retainer to the Muses was the natural son of a French financier, who for family reasons sent him over to England, and allowed him a small pension to live on; but either this pension was not regularly paid, or it was too scanty a pittance to surnish a support, as he ran in debt, and was, as before observed, lodged in a prison. Whether this confinement affected his intellects, or that it proceeded from some unknown cause, his mind however became difordered, and he was generally judged to be mad. His poetical productions increased the grounds of this belief, as they were tinctured with a wild turn of fancy, that rendered them generally incoherent and unintelligible. He usually wrote fome lines upon the prevailing topic of the day, and as usually read them to every one he met. He was a very peaceable man, unless he judged himself affronted; and he was always nettled if any one held his productions in any degree of contempt.

During his confinement in the Fleet,

UNE

foon unre-l ma-lettle-icture ; fhe ne fet-ne ne-on.— nduct, is into ent to ace at eiving ey fent , who ne mis foon ce fhe proftiliberIn tinued, es, ree, and ir own vinced it will nan the

. B.

EAU;

ecreased ey were fancy, coherent y wrote topic of to every eaceable fronted; one held of con-

he Fleet,

he

Engrav'd for the Monthly Mifeelany. Sala Salas

mere unitition, mere unitifidera as him

Сна

rough folved dage, left the fiftence excess. Hamps

he was one day in particular greatly offended by a fellow prisoner, who had torn down his engraved picture, which he had fixed up in the coffee-room. Upon this occasion, though the offender was a stout athletic man, he slew at his antagonist with the rage of a tyger, and compelled him to ask pardon, and re-place his portrait. During his confinement, he let his beard grow to an uncommon length;
but soon after his being released he cropt it, to decorate the bust of Homer, which he had in his apartment.

When discharged from his confinement, he made his appearance at many coffee-houses, where he entertained the company with his poetical productions, which generally created a laugh, and often procured him a dinner. Thefe cafual contributions were not, however, fufficient to support him with decency; and at one time his breeches in particular were in a very tattered plight, which being obferred by fome gentlemen at Slaughter's coffee-house, they made a subscription to purchase a new pair; but his pride, or caprice, or whatever it might be called, converted the money to another use; he purchased a feather for his hat, which he appeared in the next day, with his old ragged breeches.

He held Homer in the highest veneration, but considered Shakespeare as a mere jester and bussion, who preserved no unities in his dramatic productions.— Congreve he censured very judiciously indeed for his licentiousness and libertinism. Neither would he allow Voltaire any considerable share of merit, considering him as his rival, who by the ignorance of the world had been raifed to a higher pitch of fame than himfelf.

Descazeau was so very tenacious of his poetical abilities, that he would utter the rudest and most impertinent expressions to any one that would not pay him the adulation to which he thought he had a just claim. One evening in particular being at Slaughter's coffee-house, and a gentleman not approving of an incoherent rhapfody he was repeating, he gave fuch bad language, that the gentleman was induced to lay his flick across his shoulders; upon which the Chevalier, who always carried a mourning fword in his hand, drew it, and wounded the gentleman in the arm. The consequence of this affair had like to have been very ferious, as Descazeau's unarmed antagonift, being so justly provoked, would probably have demolished the poet, if the company had not interfered, and turned the bard into the street.

He latterly made a gay appearance, fome nobleman having noticed him, and given him a caft-off embroidered coat, which he conftantly wore. In this drefs, with a mourning fword, and a tin cafe, which contained his works, and which refembled a truncheon, he every day vifited the coffee-houses, and now raised more regular contributions, as some printer had generously printed his productions, and he sold the copies at a tolerable good price.

Although he had for feveral years gained his liberty by an act of infolvency, he never could be prevailed on to quiet the purlieus of the Fleet, in which he continued to the latt.

SKETCH OF THE

CHARACTERS of the KINGS and QUEENS of ENGLAND.

From WILLIAM the CONQUEROR, to GEORGE I.

WILLIAM the First, who was called the Bastard, made a thorough conquest of this island, and was resolved to make the English feel their bondage, for he taxed them so highly, that he left them nothing to enjoy but a bare substitute. He was avaricious and cruel to excess. He dispeopled a great part of Hampshire, and demolished houses and churches to make a forest for the habitation of wild beasts, to enjoy his favourite diversion of hunting.

William Rufus had all the vices of his father, without any of his virtues. It is enough to fay that all historians speak illof him, and none produce any of his good actions.

Henry the First, in order to secure the Crown

[JUNE

17 hoy

hec

tere

fo 1

tha

ien:

fere

cipi

fol:

fou

25 cal

ties

wa

bit

and

cal

thi

wa

fta

2 per

rio

Fr

œ aff

fu mo tic

tua

he

tro

Cr

his

in de

€a:

4

66 da

yo bu

Ba

ca

Crown of England to himself, against the just claim of his elder brother, Robert Duke of Normandy, restored the laws of Edward the Consession, and acted in many respects with great prudence and wisdom. He sullied his reputation by the cruelty he shewed to his brother Robert, whom he kept a prisoner 26 years. Some historians say, that he caused Robert's eyes to be put out by burning glasses.

Stephen obtained the Crown by perjury, and brought in an army of foreigners to support his illegal claim. Stephen was, notwithstanding, brave and merciful.

Henry the Second was one of the greatest and most accomplished princes that ever lived;—brave, generous, just, learned, affable, and magnificent. But, notwithstanding all his good qualities, his life was rendered unhappy, and his reign inglorious, by Becket, the proud Archbishop of Canterbury, and his rebellious children.

Richard the First had nothing to recommend him but a kind of brutal sierceness called bravery. Pride, avarice, and lust were his favourite vices. He loaded his people with excessive taxes and impositions, which the good-natured English did not repine at, because they acquired some honour by the king's prowess.

His fucceffor John was still more odious than his brother Richard. He is said to have killed his nephew Arthur with his own hands. He was insolent in prosperity, and dejected in advertity.

Henry the Third was more weak than wicked. His chief fault was excessive profuseness to his favourites.

Edward the First was a great prince, and a good legislator, but his ambition carried him beyond all bounds. His several ravages of Scotland are unjustifiable, and his behaviour to Sir William Wallace, whom he put to an ignominious death for fighting in the cause of his country, will be an indelible blot on his memory.

Edward the Second was of an eafy, weak, impotent character, and governed entirely by his favourites. He was cruelly murdered by his wife, and her minion, Earl Mortimer.

Edward the Third was certainly a Prince of great abilities, and a fuccefsful warrior, but his conquefts were of no fervice to England; he loft most of them in the latter part of his reign, when he abandoned himself in his old age to a favourite mistress.

Richard the Second was cruel, headftrong, and unjust; governed by mean and infignificant favourites. He was deposed, and put to death by his successor.

Henry the Fourth having usurped the Crown, and put his lawful Sovereign under close confinement, could not be easy till he had put him to death. He was a man of abilities, and supported with vigour his unjust title to the Crown. He is said to have felt remorse for his crimes of murder and usurpation.

Henry the Fifth was a brave and fuccefsful warrior, but his conquests in France were of no use but to drain England of men and money, and to acquire territories which could not be preserved.

The weakness of Henry the Sixth gave rife to the disputes between the Houses of York and Lancaster, which occasioned the shedding deluges of blood. This Prince would have made a good beadsman.

Edward the Fourth was brave, and wanted neither wit nor judgment, but at the fame time was luxurious, debauched, cruel, and perfidious.

Edward the Fifth was murdered, when a boy of 13 years old, by his uncle and fuccessor.

Richard the Third made his way to the Throne thro' diffimulation, perfidy, and every act of injustice and cruelty.

Henry the Seventh enacted good laws, but he was jealous and sufficious in his temper to an extravagant degree. He descended to the low arts of an usurer to raise money; he let loose his two blood-hounds Empson and Dudley to rob and pillage his subjects.

Henry the Eighth was a Prince of fine outward accompliftments; but became a monfter of cruelty and luft. Sir Walter Raleigh fays, that if the characters of all other wicked princes were loft, they would be found in Harry the Eighth.

Edward the Sixth was a very promiting Prince, but he died very young.

Queen Mary was a weak, perfecuting bigot. She felt no remorfe for fledding the blood of her innocent subjects...
Religious frenzy is the worst species of madness.

Elizabeth, her fifter, was adored by her fubjects, and admired and dreaded by foreign nations. But the Rev. Dr. Hurd has, in a pedantic dialogue, endeavoured to tarnish her reputation, by representing her in odious colours.

The very name of James the First excites ridicule, contempt, and disgust. He was called the wifest fool in Europe, for he excelled in nothing but trifles. He was entirely governed by two laseivieus

Oysi

[JUNE boys, his minions. He was always poor, by mean because he lavished on them and his flate was deterers immense fums of money. He was uccessor. fo pufillanimous, that tho' he well knew urped the that Buckingham's perfuading his fon to reign ungo to Spain was contrary to common ot be easy iense, as well as found policy, yet he suf-He was a fered himself to be bullied by that unprinwith vicipled Nobleman, and had no other conwn. He folation but in shedding tears, when he his crimes found he had not sufficient power to act and fuc-

rave, and it, but at ebauched,

red, when ancle and

way to the

fidy, and

ood laws,

ous in his

ree. He ufurer to wo blood-

rob and ice of fine

became a ir Walter

ters of all

hey would

promiting erfecuting thedding ects...

fpecies of red by her

led by fo-

Dr. Hurd

deavoured

presenting

First ex-

guft. He

urope, for fles. He lafcivious boys,

as a King ought to have done on the ocquests in Charles the First had many good qualirain Engties to adorn a private gentleman, but he o acquire was uxorious, infincere, and fond of arreferved. bitrary power. He detested Parliaments, ixth gave and even despised the Assembly at Oxford Houses of talled by that name, because they durst fioned the think and act like freemen. His death nis Prince was exemplary. ian.

Charles the Second had a good underflanding, much wit, great affability, and a plealing addrefs; with all this he was perfidious, ungrateful, tyrannical, luxurious, mean, and cruel; a penfioner of France, and a betrayer of his people.

James the Second was a Prince of great economy. He understood commercial affairs well, but his love of arbitrary power, and his attachment to the Romish superstition, induced him to commit the most flagrant acts of oppression and injustice. He was justly punished with perpetual exile for acting contrary to those laws he had sworn to maintain.

William the Third was the first who introduced what is called the influence of the Crown. The landed interest gave way in his time to funds and stocks; and this will in all probability produce in the long run despotic government. Many instances can be produced of a cruel disposition in this Prince. The business of Glencoe, and the unhappy issue of the settlement of Darien, with some other facts equally stagrant, will be an eternal stain to his memory. As to the brutality of his temper, I need only produce what is related by the Duchess of Marlborough. This man, who could himself devour a dish of pease at Christmas, in the presence of two ladies, the one his Queen, and the other a Princess, big with child, without asking them to partake, wanted the manners of a gentleman, and the feelings of a man.

Queen Anne was a good-natured lady, but weak and inconftant in her temper. She wanted a found understanding, and this want made her a dupe to others.

I have now given a very impartial tho' fhort view of the characters of 29 Princes, Monarchs of this country; and a choice collection they make of weak, wicked, cruel, and worthless wretches; for if you except about three or four of them, they come properly under these several deno-minations. However, it must be confessed, that the least respectable of our Princes have occasionally, and contrary to their own intention, conferred on this kingdom the most signal benefits. - To John's oppressions, and Henry the Third's weakness, we owe the two great Charters. To Henry the Eighth we are indebted for our freedom from the power of the Court of Rome, and the Pope's Supre-macy. To James and Charles the First we are beholden for the Petition of Right. And laftly, to James the Second's bigotry we must place the Settlement at the Revolution.

R. S.

*************

A FRAGMENT.

" , TWILL amount to nothing," faid

"No matter, (replied Eugenius) you will foon get through it; it is but a fingle day."

This conversation passed, an't please

This conversation passed, an't please your Honours, on the Calends of April; but in what year of our Lord, the very learned Allemandus, and the most learned Batavius, who have discussed this intricate point, are not agreed. I shall therefore decide nothing. In the mean time the reader may take the first that comes to hand,—the present year 1775, for instance, in want of a better.

"My thoughts and opinions for one whole day! (cried Honorius) what a nonfenfical history!"

"In the name of nonfense then (faid Eugenius) let us have it."

"In the name of nonfense you shall.
"What's o'clock? Is it time to rise?

Tie

1

61 61

ovet :

'Tis past fix. Does it rain? Is it fair? Is the wind easterly? Is it warm? Is it cold? Shall I ride? Shall I walk? Shall I put on my furtout? I will.

"How fresh, how enlivening, how infpiriting the air! how thick, how foggy this head! Let it alone, faid I, foliloquizing; perhaps the fog may disperse.

"Surely, thought I, man is but an emmet,-finding that, in my walk, I had accidentally fluck my cane in an emmet's nest, and thrown their whole empire into confusion ;- furely man is but an emmet; very important in his own eyes-very infignificant in those of superior beings .-What a buftle do they make about this attack on their little world, and what conjectures about the cause of it! They think, poor fouls, that because their little purfuits are interrupted, the whole frame of nature is falling. "At least (fay they) 'tis an earthquake." "Tis nothing (faid I) but a cane." "Thou art getting (whifpered Confcience) out of thy path." "I will recover it (faid I) pre-fently:" (I wish good folks you would all obey its dictates as readily) and on I plodded, discarding (that is as far as Mesfrs. the Metaphysicians will give me leave) all ideas, whether of fensation or reflection, and neglecting all simple modes either of duration or space, except only the mode of advancing one leg before the other, which, by dint of continual application, I had discovered to be a convenient mode for the mensuration of both.

Now if any one, taking advantage from the foregoing passage, should impute to Honorius an heretical opinion, that emmets really possess rational souls, I here absolutely protest against the consequence. Not but that, in spite of their diminutive fize, I am humbly of opinion, it is possible they may contain souls as wide as some of your Reverences.

"Every fuffering, began I to moralize, has its conclusion, and perhaps its advantage. Tea and hot rolls will shortly recompense the fatigue of my walk.

"An essay against Predestination!
cried I, sipping my tea, and taking up the Monthly Miscellany for April—

"'Tis an excellent roll—
"—And how does the author get rid of that ugly chapter of St. Paul?— Why, he e'en cuts it quite out—Oho! a fhort way with Diffenters indeed! your very humble fervant, Mr.——.

"Stop, (cries Sir Critic) here is a manifest blunder! You have fixed this conversation to the first day of April, and you take up a pamphlet which was not published till the fifteenth. It is an anachronism." "Only confider, Sir," would I reply with all the gentleness and urbanity imaginable,—laying at the same time my fore-singer on his breast, to clicit, if possible, one spark of compassion;—"only consider, I beseeth you, if authors did not now and then throw down a charitable bone, what would your family, and your relations the Commentators, do for a subsidence?" I must postpone my defence to some future period of this delectable history—time presses—business is urgent—I have two dishes of tea yet to drink, and a chapter of the Roman History to snish.

This Tarquin the Proud, what a monfter of iniquity! but her wife Tullia, driving her chariot on her father's dead body! "It cannot be!" faid Humanity, throwing down the book with indignation. "It is true," faid Mr. Hooke.—
"All the charities of Nature disprove it à priori," replied Humanity. "Dionyfius Halicarnassens, Livy, and all the historians prove it a posseriori," rejoined Mr. Hooke. "I am sorry for it," iaid I, interposing, and breaking off the dispute.

"—— Mr. Elegit, Sir, calls to request your attendance at the ensuing trial between A. and B. to give evidence on the part of his client, the plaintiff."

"Pish! (faid I) why has he chosen to plague me in the bufiness?

(The pun wiped away in some degree the effects of the pish. It was not a pish of ill nature. It was a pish of sensibility. The idea of an examination, and cross examination, struck upon the weak nerves of Honorius, who was a valetudinarian, and brought a sympathetic suffusion over his cheek. He was indeed "tremblingly alive all o'er," and his sensibility approximated sometimes to irritability; which your worships know is within a letter or two of irascibility. This is a weakness; but I write an history, not an apology.)

" But public justice, Sir"—
"I comprehend, Mr. Elegit, the force of your argument. But what is the state of the case?"

"The declaration, Sir, sets forth,—

"that the Defendant B. late of C. in the "parish of D. and county of E. did, on "the second of September, in the year of our Lord, 1774, with force and arms,

"fish in the free fishery of the Plaintis"

"A. at D. in the county aforesaid; and

"thereout and therefrom did take and

"carry away certain fish, to wit, one jack, four barbels, and 15 gudgeons,

JUNE

not pub.

anachrowould I urbanity

time my

t, if pol-

- " only

s did not haritable

and your

or a fubefence to able hif. rgent-I ik, and a finish.

t a mon-Tullia,

er's dead amanity,

indignalooke.sprove it

Dionyall the rejoined " faid I, dispute.

Is to re-

ning trial

lence on

" contrary to the statute in such case " made and provided, whereby the faid " Plaintiff A. fays, declares, and will " prove, that he is injured, and hath fuf-" tained damage and lofs, to the amount " of two shillings and fix-pence, and " thereupon he brings his fuit." " Gentle powers of love and concord!

(exclaimed I) could ye not flied one drop of your healing balm on these wounded spirits? Do they consider that every plea, replication, and rejoinder, brings them a step forwarder on their jour-ney thro' life? Why should they waste the little oil remaining in their lamps, in lighting up these flames of contention !-

Was there no kind friend, no generous neighbour, to negotiate a treaty of peace between them?"

" That's not my bufinefs-"

" True, Mr. Elegit-I remember (refumed I) to have had fome discourse with a stranger about that time and place .-He told me part of his flory-It was a melancholy one-I am not capable, faid he, of enjoying any but calm and placid He intended, poor man, amusements. no injury.

" It may be fo," returned Elegit. " I will speak (added I) to the plain-

MISCELLANY.

LETTERS from a FATHER to his DAUGHTER.

LETTER

My dear Child,

T was with pleasure I observed the im-I provement you feem to have made in your behaviour, by the opportunities you have already had. Good behaviour is a valuable attainment, and ferves much to recommend a young person in the world. But there are fome good qualifications worthy of being acquired, of as great, or perhaps greater importance, towards dif-charging the several duties of life, and appearing with credit and respect in the world. As I am not like soon to have an opportunity of converfing with you as I expected, and communicating to you, by words, my thoughts on various heads, I am willing to give you fome advice for your future conduct, by letter.

Occonomy, or the art of managing the affairs of a family, in their feveral parts, so as to provide in due order for all the occasions of it, and the making a handfome appearance in a most frugal manner, is a very useful and valuable knowledge, fuch as tends much to promote the future comfort and prosperity of a family, and make a woman shine in her sphere; and is undoubtedly an art well worth studying, and labouring after, and, I think, stands in the front of female accomplish-

But, as women are reasonable creatures as well as men, I am not for limiting MISCELL. VOL. III.

their regards only to the cares of a family; on the contrary, I think it highly deferves their care, to improve the faculties of their understandings ar far as they

It is, I think, a reproach to the present age, that, notwithstanding our pretensions to great advancement in knowledge and learning, fo little care is taken in improving the minds of the female fex ; the principal accomplishments of many of whom are dreis and chit-chat. But I would not have you, my dear daughter, content yourfelf with being like fuch .- I hope better things of you.

As you live in an age, in which true knowledge and learning are at so low an ebb in your fex, a finall degree of learning, which may be easily obtained, will make a woman appear to great ad-vantage among her fex; tho', that they are capable of great improvement, as well as men, in knowledge, and even in deep learning, there are now and then inftances to evince, tho' but rare, which I will not impute to the scarcity of good capacities in the fex, but to the negligence of the present age, in point of female education.

The first step I would recommend to you towards knowledge and true wildom, is the knowledge of God, and his relation to you. I do not doubt your belief of the being and providence of God; but I ff." chosen to ne degree ot a pifh nfibility. and cross ak nerves dinarian, fion over mblingly approxi-; which letter or eakness; ology.) the force

the state

forth,-C. in the did, on ne year of nd arms, Plaintiff aid; and take and wit, one udgeons, ee . COH-

11 il

a

e

r

would have you frequently exercise your mind in thinking upon him, and confifidering,-that he is the Almighty Maker of all things in heaven and in earth, the Author of all being, the Giver of all good; that all things are continually sup-ported by him; the sun would not rise in the morning, nor the fpring return after the winter, nor the feed that is fown in the earth fpring up, and grow and increase, nor the blood flow in your veins, nor your life be supported, without his constant providence and influence: fo that you are daily and continually indebted to him for life, and breath, and all things; for in him you live, and move, and have your being. Believe the constant presence of God; that he is ever with you, and his eye is ever upon you; that he knows the fecret thoughts of your mind; that he is your kind parent, and loving friend; always nigh at hand; ready to promote the hapiness of every one of his creatures, that do not render themselves unworthy of his favour, by ungratefully flighting and forgetting him author of all their bleffings, and livin the abuse of his favours: therefore never forget a daily remembrance, and grateful acknowledgement of the obligagations you are under to God, and of your dependance upon him,-every day fincerely thanking him for all you have, and praying to him for all you want .-Believe, also, that as the eye of God obferves all your actions, and all your thoughts, there will be a day in which he will render to every one according to their behaviour in this present life; -they that walk worthy of the mercies of God here, shall continue to partake of his favour, and be happy for ever; but they that ungratefully despite his favours here, and live without any regard to him, shall be cast out of his favour hereafter, into a state of misery for ever. And content not yourself with acknowledging you believe, but be frequently thinking on this, till you get a real and firm belief of these things impressed upon your mind.

things impressed upon your mind.

Having obtained this knowledge of God, let your next step be, to direct your mind frequently and seriously to him; that he who formed your foul, and gave you an understanding superior to the beasts and inferior creatures of the earth, would be pleased to strengthen your understanding, enlighten your mind, and lead you to true wisdom. This is the way Solomon got his wisdom, by asking it of God. This is the way St. James recommends to every one that desires wisdom, and the way to which I ascribe the small degree of knowledge I have attained.

Having thus impressed upon your mind a real sense of the being, perfections, goodness, and presence of God; of your obligations to him, and dependence upon him, and the reward you may expest to receive from him, according to your behaviour here, and the improvement you make of those talents he has given you, (which also should be an argument with you to improve your understanding as much as you can) I would in the next place have you labour clearly to understand the principles of the Christian Religion.

But what I have now wrote will be fufficient to employ your mind for some time, and by the time you have digested this into your understanding, may expect to hear from me further, in continuation of this subject.

I remain, dear child, fincerely wishing and praying for your happiness here and hereafter.

Your affectionate Father,

G***** W*****.

W-----, O.S. 19, 1757.

**◆◇◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

SKETCH OF THE

MODE of LIVING observed by their MAJESTIES.

A T fix in the morning they rife, and lenjoy the two succeeding hours, which they call their own: at eight the Prince of Wales, the Bishop of Osnaburgh, the Princes Royal, and the Princes William and Henry, are brought from their several houses, to Kew-house, to breakfast with their illustrious relations.

At nine, their younger children attend to life, or finile their good-morrows, and whilf the five eldest are closely applying to their tasks, their little ones and their nurses pass the whole morning in Richmond Gardens.

The King and Queen frequently amuse themselves with fitting in the room, while UNE lieve.

, till thefe

ge of tyour

him;

l gave

o the earth,

ur un

, and is the aiking

James defires

ascribe

ive at-

r mind

ctions,

of your e upon

pect to our be-ent you

n you,

nt with ding as he next under-

n Reli-

will be or fome digested

y expect nuation

withing here and

****

***

IES.

n attend

ws, and applying

and their in Rich-

the children dine; and once a week, attended by the whole offspring in pairs, make the little delightful tour of Richmond Gardens. In the afternoon the Queen works, and the King reads to her; and whatever charms ambition or folly may conceive await fo exalted a fituation, it is neither on the throne, nor in the drawing-room, nor in the splendor of the toys of fovereignty, that they place their felicity; it is in focial and domestic gratifications, in breathing the free air, admiring the works of nature, tafting and encouraging the elegancies of art, and in living to their own hearts. In the evening all the children again pay their duty at Kew-house, before they retire to bed, and the fame order is observed through each returning day. The Sovereign is the father of his family; not a grievance reaches his knowledge, that remains unredreffed, nor a character of merit or in-genuity difregarded; his private conduct therefore is as exemplary as it is amiable; and was he only as happy in his counfellors as his immediate predecessors, there would be little doubt of his equalling them in glory.

Though naturally a lover of peace, his personal courage cannot in the smallest degree be impeached; he exercises his troops himself, understands every martial manœuvre as well as any private centinel in his fervice, and has the articles of war at his fingers ends. Topography is one of his favourite studies; he copies every capital chart, takes the models of all the celebrated fortifications, knows the foundings of the chief harbours in Europe, and the strong and weak sides of most fortified towns. He can name every thip in his navy, and he keeps lifts of the commanders. As all these are private, and felf-elected acquisitions, it may be justly prefumed that if care had been taken of his education, he would have been no lefs skilful in the arts of government, than in these under-branches of princely occupa-

The Prince of Wales, and the Bishop of Osnaburgh bid fair, however, for excelling the generality of mankind in learning, as much as they are their superiors in rank: eight hours close application to the languages, and the liberal sciences, is daily enjoined them, and their industry is unremitting: all the ten are indeed fine children, and it does not yet appear that parental partiality is known at Court.

Exercise, air, and light diet, are the grand fundamentals in the king's idea of health and sprightliness; his Majesty feeds chiefly on vegetables, and drinks little wine. The Queen is what many private gentlewomen would call whimfically abitemious; for at at a table covered with dainties, she culls the plainest and the fimplest dish, and seldom eats of more than two things at a meal. Her wardrobe is changed every three months; and while the nobility are eager to supply themselves with foreign trifles, her care is that nothing but what is English shall be provided for her wear. The tradefmens bills are regularly paid once a quarter for what comes under the children's department, and the whole is judiciously and happily conducted.

[Lond. Mag.]

♦♦♦♦♦♦♦♦♦$$$$$$$$$$$ For the MONTHLY MISCELLANY.

QUESTION.

Dr. Smollett, in his History of England, observes, " That when the Britons and Caledonians opposed the inroads of the warlike Romans, headed by their courageous and potent Emperor Severus, in the second century, that they (the Britons and Caledonians) had a very extraordinary Eatable, of which the bigness of a common Bean was sufficient to satisfy the cravings of hunger and thirst." --- What was this Eatable?

Salifbury.

T is impossible to give a positive answer to this enquiry; but it is well known that the Ancients had many compositions for allaying thirst and hunger. I have were of infinite fervice in times of fcarcity, long voyages, and warlike expeditions.

In a manuscript scholium on a book of Heron, in the Vatican Library, is the foltelected here a few of their receipts, which Il lowing direction for making the Epimenli 2

tly amuse m, while the dian composition, which was deemed a very nourithing medicine:

The sea onion being boiled, washed with water, and afterwards dried, was cut into very thin slices, to which a fifth part of sesame was added, and a fifteenth of poppy; all which being mixed and worked up into a mass with honey, the whole was divided into portions about the bigness of a walnut, whereof two in the day, taken morning and evening, were sufficient to prevent both hunger and thirst.

There was also another way of preparing it, by taking a pint of sesame, the fame quantity of oil, and two quarts of unshelled sweet almonds; when the fefame was dried, and the almonds ground and fifted, the fea-onions were to be peeled and fliced, the roots and leaves being cut off; then pounding them in a mortar till reduced to a pap, an equal part of honey was to be added, and both worked up with the oil: afterwards all the ingredients were to be put into a pot, on the fire, and stirred with a wooden ladle, till tho-toughly mixed. When the mass acquired a folid consistence, it was taken off the fire, and formed into lozenges, of which vo only, as above, were very fufficient for a day's subfistence.

Avicenna relates, that a person, setting out upon a journey, drank one pound of oil of violets, mixed with melted beef suer, and afterwards continued fasting for ten days together, without the least hunger. He says, that the oil of almonds and beef-suet will effect the same, by their viscidity. Hence it was that this celebrated physician, who knew things more by unquestionable experiments, than by idle speculations and conjectures, prescribed the following composition, which, in time of famine by sea or land, might be extremely serviceable.

Take of unshell'd sweet almonds one pounds, and the like quantity of melted beef-suet; of oil of violets two ounces; a sufficient quantity of mucilage; and of the roots of marsh-mallows one ounce; let all together be brayed in a mortar, and made into bolusses about the bigness of a common nut. They must be kept so as to prevent their melting by the heat of the sun.

The American Indians use a composition of the juice of tobacco, with calcined shells of snails, cockles, oysters, &c. which they make into pills, and dry in the shade. Whenever they go upon a long journey, and are likely to be destitute of provisions by the way, they put one of these pills between the lower lip and the teeth, and by swallowing what they suck from it, feel neither hunger, thirst, nor fatigue, for four or siye days together.

н. J.

LASHOVTUTTECSON

MOSDA

Pti

I

SELECT OBSERVATIONS on SIMILAR SUBJECTS.

BY VARIOUS AUTHORS.

MUSIC.

T.

THE powers of Music are either felt or known by all men, and are allowed to work strangely upon the mind and the body, the passions and the blood; to raise joy and grief; to give pleasure and pain; to cure diseases, and the mortal sting of the Tarantula; to give motions to the feet, as well as to the heart; to compose dissurbed thoughts; to assist and heighten devotion itself. We need no recourse to the Fables of Orpheus or Amphion, or the force of their music upon sithes and beasts: 'tis enough that we find the charming of serpents, and the cure or allay of an evil spirit or possession attributed to it in sacred writ.

Sir WILLIAM TEMPLE.

II.

The breathing flutes' fost notes are heard around,

And the shrill trumpets mix their filver sound; The vaulting roofs with echoing music ring. These touch the vocal stops, and Those the trembling string.

trembling string.

Not thus Amphion tun'd the warbling lyre,
Nor Joab the sounding clarion could infire;
Not fierce Theodomas, whose sprightly strain
Could swell the soul to rage, and fire the martial train.

III.

Orpheus's miftress was Music. The powers of it are enchanting: it lulls the reason, and raises the fancy in so agreeable a manner, that we forget ourselves while it lasts: the mind turns dissolute and gay; and hugs itself in all the deluding prospects and gay wishes of a golden dream; whilst every accent is warbled over

JUNE

t hun-lmonds

ne, by nat this things

iments.

conjec-ompofifea or ids one melted

ounces;

and of ounce;

tar, and els of a pt fo as heat of omposicalcined

c, which he shade.

journey,

rovisions

pills be-

, and by it, feel

forfour

H. J.

+++++

ECTS.

are heard

lver found;

ufic ring, Those the ling lyre,

ld inspire;

thely strain

re the mar-

fic. The

t lulls the fo agree.

t ourselves s dissolute

the delud:

of a golden s warbled over

POPE.

ble.

over by a charming voice, a filly fong appears found morality; and the very words of the Opera pass for sense, in presence of their accompagnamento. But no sooner does the Music cease, than the charm is undone, and the fancies disappear. The first sober look we take of it breaks the spell, and we are hurried back, with some regret, to the common dull road of life, when the slorid illusion is vanished.

TV

BLACKWELL.

Ever against eating cares Lap me in foft Lydian airs, Married to immortal verfe, Such as the melting foul may pierce In notes, with many a winding bout Of linked fweetness long drawn out; With wanton heed, and gid y cunning, The melting voice thro' mazes running; Untwifting all the chains that tye The hidden foul of harmony: That Orpheus' felf may heave his head From golden flumber on a bed Of heap'd Elyfian flowers, and hear Such strains as would have won the ear Of Pluto, to have quite fet free His half-regain'd Eurydice. L'ALLEGRO.

— O fad virgin, that thy power
Might raife Mufaeus from his bower,
Or bid the foul of Orpheus fing
Such notes, as warbled to the ftring,
Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
And made Hell grant what Love did feek!

LL PENSEROSO.

It is a property of Music, that the same strains have a power to excite pain or pleasure, as the state is in which it finds the hearer. Hence Milton makes the self-same strains of Orpheus proper to excite both the affections of mirth and melancholy, just as the mind is then disposed. If to mirth, he calls for such Music,

That Orpheus felf may heave his head, &c. If to melancholy,— Orbid the foul of Orpheus fing, &c.

See WARBURTON'S SHAKESPEAR, Vol. 111. p. 118.

V

Can any mortal mixture of earth's mold, Breathe fuch divine enchanting ravishment? Sure something holy lodges in that breast, And with these raptures moves the vocal air To testify his hidden residence! How sweetly did they float upon the wings of silence, thro' the empty vaulted night, At every fall smoothing the raven down of darkness' till it smiled! I have oft heard My mother Circe, with the Syrens three,

Amidft the flow'ry-kirtled * Naiades, Culling their potent herbs, and baleful drugs; Who, as they fung, would take the prifon'd foul.

And lap it in Elyfium. Scylla wept,
And chid her barking waves into attention,
And fell Charybdis murmur's foft applause:
Yetthey in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself:
But such a facred and home-felt delight,
Such sober certainty of waking blis
I never heard till now.

Comys.

VI.

I have often wondered to hear men of good fense and good nature profess a dislike to Music, when at the same time they do not scruple to own, that it has the most agreeable and improving influences over their minds: It seems to mean an unhappy contradiction, that those persons should have an indifference for an art, which raises in them such a variety of sublime pleasures.

VII.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud—
(Which is the hot condition of their blood)

(Which is the hot condition of their blood)
If they perchance but hear a trumpet found,
Or any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand;
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze
By the sweet power of Music. Therefore the Poet

Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, flones, and floods; Since nought fo flockish, hard, and full of rage,

But Music for the time doth change his nature.
SHAKESPEAR.

VIII

The force of found in alarming the passions is prodigious. Thus the noise of thunder, the shouts of war, the uproar of an enraged ocean, strike us with terror: so again, there are certain sounds natural to joy, others to grief and despondency, others to tenderness and love; and by hearing these, we naturally sympathize with those who either enjoy or suffer. —
Thus Music, either by imitating these various sounds in due subord nation to the laws of air and harmony, or by any

A cap of flowers, and a Kirtle, Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

o:her

* A Kirtle is a woman's gown: a word ufed by Chaucer and Spenfer. It is alfo ufed by Shakefpear, in 2 Hen, IV. Act II. Sc. II. Falftaff fays to Dell, "What will you have a Kirtle of?" And in one of his fonnets, other method of affociation bringing the objects of our paffions before us, does naturally raise a variety of passions in the human breast, similar to the sounds which are expressed; and thus, by the Mussian's art, we are often carried into the sury of a battle or a tempest; we are by turns elated with joy, or sunk into pleasing forrow; roused to courage, or quelled by grateful terrors; melted into pity, tenderness, or love; or transported to the regions of bliss, in an extacy of divine praise.

Avison.

IX.

Hark! What pleasing sounds invite mine ear,

"So venerably fweet?" 'Tis Sion's lute.
"Behold her hero*!" From his valiant brow

Looks Judah's lion, on his thigh the fword Of vanquishtd Appolonius. The shrill trump Through Betheron proclaims th' approaching fight.

I fee the brave youth lead his little band, From toil and hunger faint, yet from his arm The rapid Syrian flies.——

"The hero comes †,"—'Tis boundless mirth and song, And dance, and triumph, every lab'ring string And voice, and breathing shell, in concert

frain
To swell the raptures of tumultuous joy.

LANGHORNE.

x. . .

I could heartily wish there was the fame application and endeavours to cultivate and improve our Church Munc, as have been lately bestowed on that of the Stage. Our Composers have one very great inducement to it; they are fure to meet with excellent words, and at the fame time a wonderful variety of them .-There is no passion that is not finely expressed in those parts of the inspired writings, which are proper for divine fongs and anthems. Music, when thus applied, raises noble hints in the minds of the hearer, and fills it with great conceptions : it strengthens devotion, and advances praise into rapture. ADDISON.

XI.

Let my due feet never faile,
And love the high-embowed roof,
With antic pillars, maffy proof,
And floried windows rightly dight, Cafling a dim religious light.
"There let the pealing organ blow
"To the full-voic'd quire below,

* Judas Maccabeus.

+ Chorus of Youths in Judas Maccabeus.

"In fervice high, and anthems clear,
"As may with fweetnefs, thro' mine ear,
"Diffolve me into extacles,

" And bring all heav'n before mine eyes,"

IL PENSEROSO.

XII.

It was the custom of this time (speaking of the reign of Charles the Second) for almost every rhymer to try his hand in an Ode to St. Cecilia: we find many déspicable rhapsodies so called in Tonson's Miscellanies. We have there also preserved another, and an earlier Ode of Dryden on this subject. It was set to Music, 1687, by J. Baptista Draghi. One stanza I cannot help inserting in this note:

What paffion cannot Music raise and quell!
When Jubal struck the chorded shell,
His list ning brethren stood around,
And wond'ring on their faces fell,
To worship that celestial sound:
Less than a God they thought there could not dwell

Within the hollow of that shell, That spoke so sweetly and so well— What passion cannot Music raise and quell!

The reader, doubtlefs, observes the fine effect of the repetition of the lattline; as well as the stroke of nature, in making those rude hearers imagine some God lay concealed in this first musician's instrument.

WARTON.

XIII.

Strike up, my mafters, But touch the firings with a religious foftness

Teach founds to languish thro' the night's dull ear,

Till Melancholy start from her lazy couch, And Carelessness grow convert to Attention. THEORALD.

XIV.

The good and evil in a state depends greatly on the Music that is most encouraged in it. If it be too light and wanter, the people are insensibly rendered soolish and disorderly; if, on the contrary, it be grave and masculine, they become modes by its influence.

CICERO.

XV.

Tune fome harmonious lay, whose sprightly notes

Flow in fuch happy descant as may speed The lazy hours that now move flowly on With dull and flagging pinions. "For sweet

Music
"Has got a mag'c spell to aid their flight,
"And

JUNE

e ear,

eyes."

EROSO.

(Speak.

Second)

s hand in d many

Tonfon's

also pre-

e of Dry.

o Music,

in this

nd quell!

could not

d quell!

erves the e latt line;

in making

e God lay

's instru-

ARTON.

gious foft-

night's dull

y couch,

Attention,

EOBALD.

heli,

-One

" And make them skim through their diurnal " round,

"Swift as the fwallow circles," MASON'S ELFRIDA.

XVI.

The various mixtures of harmonies, the preparation of discords, and their refolution into concords; the fweet fuccef-fion of melodies, and feveral other circumstances beside these, do all tend to give that variety of expression, which elevates the foul into joy or courage, finks it into tenderness or pity, fixes it in a rational ferenity, or raifes it to the raptures of devotion.

XVII.

- Hark ! Wak'd from according lyres, the fweet strains

In symphony divine; from air to air The trembling numbers fly: fwift burfts away

The flow of joy; now swells the flight of praise

Springs the shrill trump aloft; the toiling chords

Melodious labour thro' the flying maze; And the deep base his strong sounds rolls away Majestically fweet.

LANGHORNE.

[West. Mag.]

D

The SCOTS PEDLAR.

A Short time fince, Sawney Frazer, a native of the northern part of this island, who, by vending of linen which he carried around the country on his back, had acquired a fum of one hundred pieces of gold, resolving to extend his business by the addition of other wares, set out for London, in order to purchase them to the best advantage.

When he had arrived within a few miles of the end of his journey, he was obliged to take shelter in a house of entertainment, which stood in a lonely part of the road, from a violent storm of wind and rain; where he had not been long, before he was joined by two horsemen of genteel appearance, who stopped on the same account.

As he was in possession of the fire-fide, they were under a necessity of joining company with him, in order to dry themtelves, which otherwise the meanness of his appearance would probably have prevented their doing. The new companions had not fat long together before the chearfulness of his temper, and fomething uncommonly droll in his conversation, made the others invite him to sup with them at their expence, where they entertained him fo generoufly, that, forgetting his national prudence, he could not forbear thewing his treasure, as a proof of his not being unworthy of the honour they had done him.

The form having obliged them to remain there all night, they departed together next morning, when, as a further mark of their regard, they kept company with him, tho' he travelled on foot, till they came into a folitary part of the road; when one of them, putting a piftol to his breaft, took from him the bag which contained the earnings of his life, leaving him only a fingle piece of gold, which by good fortune he had happened to have loofe in his pocket.

His diffress at such a loss may be easily conceived. However, he funk not under it. A thought instantly occurred to him how it might possibly be retrieved; which he lost not a moment to put in execution.

He had observed that the master of the house, where he had met these two plunderers, seemed to be perfectly acquainted with them. He returned therefore thither directly, and feigned to have been taken fuddenly ill on the road with a disorder in his bowels; called for some wine, which he had heated, and rendered still stronger with spice; all the time he was drinking which, he did nothing but pray for his late companions, who he faid had not only advised him to take it, but also been so generous as to give him a piece of gold, which he produced to pay for it; and then, feeming to be much relieved, he lamented most heavily his not knowing where to return thanks to his benefactors, which he faid the violence of his pain had made him forget to enquire. The master of the house, to whom his guefts had not mentioned the man's have ing money, that he might not expect to fhare it with them, never fulpecting the truth of his story, informed him, without scruple, who they were, and where they

This was directly what he had schemed for. He crawled away till he was out of fight from the house, in order to keep up te depends oft encound wanton, red foolish

trary, it he me modelt CICERO.

ofe sprightly ay speed owly on for fweet

ir flight,

the deceit; when he made all the hafte he could to town, and enquiring for his spoilers, had the fatisfaction to hear they were people in trade, and of good repute for their wealth. The next morning, therefore, as foon as he thought they were firring, he went to the house of one of them, whom he found in the room where his merchandize was exposed to fale.—The merchant instantly knew him; but, imagining he came on some other business, (for he did not think it possible that he could know him in his altered appearance) asked him in the usual way, "what he wanted."

"I want to fpeak a word wi' ye in private, Sir," he answered, getting between him and the door; and then, on the Merchant's affecting surprize: "In gude troth, Sir, (he continued) I think it is somewhat strange that ye shud na ken Sawney, who supped with ye the neeght before the laust, after au the keendness ye shewed to him!" then, lowering his voice, so as not to be overheard by the people present, he told him, with a determined accent, that if he did not instantly return him his money, he would apply to a Magistrate for redress.

This was a demand which admitted not of difpute. The money was paid him, with a handfome gratuity for having lent it, and his receipt taken to that effect; after which he went directly to the other, upon whom he made a like demand, with equal fuccess.

[Univ. Mag.]

A LETTER from a QUAKER, to the CLERGYMAN of the Parish, Respecting his Pigeons building in and about the Church.

LOVING friend, as I may call thee, though not of Light,-I give thee to wit, and by this my Epistle would have thee to understand, that I have some tribulation and trouble upon my spirit about my Pigeons, for they have got a haunt of going into the Steeple-house; which thing is utterly against my mind, and it grieveth me forely to fee it. For besides the rent thee doft expect, there are two evils in this thing. The first is the Amen-sayer, the priest's mate, or man of the spade, that maketh fuch a noise in singing, that it terrifyeth Friends, who cannot hold with such carnal things, to hear the madness of the creature. This hireling of hirelings, and instrument of darkness, getteth my Pigeons, and useth them for the refreshment of the outward man. And I am afraid the Man of Sin, the Priest himself, may have some share with him, which would be much against my will, if such thing should be.

Secondly, their going into that place giveth great uneafiness to me, because I cannot with the inward eye difcern whe. ther they have been in the Steeple-house or not; which did I know, verily I would in no wife eat them at all. Now the thing I would have thee to do, is, fince thou haft a near friend among the perfecuting men, to have some order for the Steeple. house men for the year, who will do as thou would'it have them, to make up the noise-holes of the Steeple-house, that neither Pigeons nor Starnels (both which I greatly love in a pye, when undefiled) may enter in. And if thou be'est of a mind to fay that these birds defile the Steeple-house, and make it nasty, thou must take that upon thyself; for verily I cannot fay that the Pigeons defile the Steeple-house, but that the Steeple-house defileth them, and maketh them unfit for the food of thy Friend in the Inward Light.

King JAMES I.

A short time after that wife Monarch came to the throne of England, he took it in his head one day to go and hear causes in Westminster-hall, in order to fhew his great learning and wifdom .-Accordingly being feated on the bench, a cause came on, which the counsel, learned in the law, set forth to such advantage, on the part of the Plaintiff, that the fagacity of the Royal Judge foon faw the justice of it so clearly, that he frequently cried out, "I'fe ken the matter unco weel! The gude mon is i' the reeght! the gude mon is i' the reeght! He mun ha' it! he mun ha' it!" The Plaintiff's The Plaintiff's counsel having ended, James was for determining the cause immediately, and was much offended, after so plain a state of the matter, that the Judges of the Court hould defire him to hear both parties before he passed judgment. At length, curiofity to know what could be faid in fuch a case, rather than any respect to the rules of the Court, made him defer his decifion; but the Defendant's counsel had fcarce begun to open their cause, when his facred Majesty appeared greatly discomposed, and was so puzzled as they proceeded, that he had no patience to hear them out, but starting up in a passion, cried, "I'se hear na mair; ye're au knaves aleeke! Ye gi' each other the lee, and neither's i' the reeght."

t t a pT capth

po to [JUNE himself, n, which , if such hat place because I ern wheple-house y I would the thing ince thou erfecuting e Steeplevill do as ke up the , that neih which I andefiled) e'est of a defile the ifty, thou unfit for or verily I defile the

eple-house

Monarch , he took and hear order to wifdom .e bench, a fel, learned advantage, t the fagan faw the frequently atter unco he reeght! He mun Plaintiff's vas for dey, and was a state of f the Court parties be-length, cufaid in fuch to the rules er his decicounsel had ause, when greatly difled as they ence to hear A LETTER from the Right Hon. the Earl of HERTFORD, Lord Chamberlain of the King's Houshold, to the LORD-MAYOR of London, transmitted the Day after the spirited Remonstrance of the Livery of London, on American Assairs, was presented to his Majesty; with the LORD-MAYOR's Answer.

Copy of a Letter from the Lord Chamberlain to the Lord Mayor of London.

My Lord,

THE King has directed me to give notice, that for the future his Majerty will not receive on the Throne any Addrefs, Remonfrance and Petition, but from the body corporate of the city.

I therefore acquaint your Lordship with it as shief magistrate of the city, and have the honour to be, my Lord, your Lordship's

Most obedient humble fervant, Grofvenor-fireet, April 11. HERTFORD. To the Right Hon. John Wilkes, Lord-Mayor of the city of London.

The LORD-MAYOR's Answer.

My Lord, Mansion-house, May 2, 1775.

It is impossible for me to express, or conceal, the extreme aftonishment and grief left at the notice your Lordship's letter gave me as chief magistrate of the city, "that for "the future his Majetty will not receive on "the throne any address, remonstrance and "petition, but from the body corporate of "the city."

I intreat your Lordship to lay me with all humility at the King's feet, and, as I have now the honour to be chief magistrate, in my name to supplicate his Majesty's justice and goodness in behalf of the Livery of London, that he would be graciously pleased to revoke an order, highly injurious to their rights and privileges, which in this instance have been constantly respected, and carefully preserved by all his royal predecessors. The livery of London, my Lord, have approved themselves the zealous friends of liberty and the proteftant succession. They have steadily pursued only those measures, which are calculated to fecure the free constitution of this country, and this your Lordship well knows has created them the hatred of all the partizans of the exiled and profcribed family. They form the great and powerful body of the corporation, in whom most important powers are vefted, the election of the first magistrate, the sheriffs, the chamberlain, the auditors of thereceipt and expenditure of their revenues, and of the four members, who represent in parliament the capital of this vast empire.-The full body corporate never affemble, nor could they legally act together as one great, aggregate body; for by the constitution of the city particular and diffinct privileges are referved to the various members of the corporation, to the freemen, to the liverymen, to the common council, to the court of aldermen. His Majesty's Solicitor General, Mr. Wedderburne, was confulted by the city in the year 1771, respecting the legality of common halls and the remonstrances of the livery. In conjunction with Mr. Serjeant Glynn, Mr. Dunning, and Mr. Nugent, he gave an opinion, which I have the honour of transcribing from our records.

"We apprehend that the head officer of "every corporation may convene the body, or any clais of it, whenever he thinks proper--that the Lord-Mayor for the time being, may, of his own authority, legally call a common hall; and eve fee no legal diction to his calling the two left - we conceive it to be the duty of the proper officers of the feveral companies, to whom precepts for the purpose of summoning their respective liveries have been usually directed, to execute those precepts; and that a wilful resultation their part is an offence punishable by disfranchisement."

The city, my Lord, have been careful that all their proceedings should be grounded in the true principles of law and the constitution. Notwithstanding it is the clear right of the subject to petition the King for the redress of grievances, a right, which so many thousands of our fellow-subjects, my Lord, have justly thought it their duty very frequently to exercise in the last ten years, yet the city from excess of caution took a great legal opinion in the case, and I find the following words entered in their journals by the express order of the common hall.

"The livery of London legally affembled in common hall, either on Midfummer, Michaelmas, or any other day, have an undoubted right to take into confideration any matter of public grievance they may think proper. It is beyond dispute that the right is inherent in them." A Jury have likewife declared this in a folemn verdict.

I have been thus particular, my Lord, on this subject from our records, because I differ in one point from the last opinion, which I quoted; for I know there is no right or privilege of this free people, or of mankind, but what has been disputed, and even denied, by pensioned pens and tongues in the fervice of the arbitrary ministers of arbitrary kings.

Your Lordfhip, I am fure, will now no longer fuffer a doubt to remain in your mind as to the legality of common halls, or of their extensive powers, and therefore I prefume to lay claim on behalf of the livery of London to the ancient privilege of presenting to the King on the throne any address, petition, or remonstrance. In this manner have the address of the livery constantly been received both by his present Majesty and all his royal predecessors, the Kings of England. On the most exact research I do not find a single

k inftan

Δ

a paffion,

ye're au ther the lee,

gives an abfolute right, and is as little fubject to controverfy as any fair or just prerogative of the crown. Other rights and privileges of the city have been invaded by despotic monarchs, by feveral of the accurat race of the Stuarts, but this in no period of our history. It has not even been brought into question till the present inauspicious æra. I have an entire confidence, my Lord, that a right left uninvaded by every tyrant of the Tarquin race, will be facredly preferved under the government of our prefent Sovereign, because his Majesty is perfectly informed, that in confequence of their expulfion his family was chosen to protect and defend the rights of a free people, whom they endeavoured to enflave.

It cannot escape your Lordship's recollection, that at all times, when the privileges of the capital were attacked, very fatal confequences enfued. The invation of the liberties of the nation we have generally feen preceded by attempts on the franchifes of the first city in the kingdom, and the shock has fpread from the centre to the most diftant point of the circumference of this wideextended empire. I hope his Majesty's goodness will revoke an order, which might perhaps in this light be confidered as ominous to the people at large, no less than injurious to he citizens of this metropolis. Such a meaare only could quiet the alarm which has already spread too far, and given gloomy apprehensions of futurity.

The privilege, my Lord, for which I contend, is of very great moment, and peculiarly striking. When his Majesty receives on the throne any address, it is read by the proper officer to the King in the presence of the petitioners. They have the fatisfaction of knowing that their fovereign has heard their complaints. They receive an answer. If the same address is presented at a levee, or in any other mode, no answer is given. A suspicion may arise, that the addrefs is never heard or read, because it is only received, and immediately delivered to the Lord in waiting. If he is tolerably verfed in the supple, infinuating arts practifed in the magic circle of a court, he will take care never to remind his Prince of any difainstance to the contrary. This immemorial if greeable and disgusting, however important usage in the opinion of the ablest lawyers and wholesome, truths. He will strangle in its birth the fair offspring of liberty, because its cries might awaken and alarm the parent, and thus the common father of all his people may remain equally ignorant and unhappy in his most weighty concerns,

Important truths, my Lord, were the foundation of the last humble address, remonttrance, and petition to the King, respecting our brave fellow-fubjects in America, The greatness as well as goodness of the cause, and the horrors of an approaching civil war, justified our application to the throne, It comprehended every thing interesting to us as a free and commercial people, the first principles of our common liberty, and the immense advantages of the only trade we enjoy unrivalled by other nations. I greatly fear that your Lordship's letter immediately following his Majesty's unfavourable answer to the remonstrance, will be considered as a fresh mark of the King's anger against our unhappy brethren, as well as of his difpleafure against the faithful Citizens of this capital. The Livery, possessing the purest in-tentions, the most noble and exalted views for the public good, will comfort themselves, with the appeal to that justice in the Sovereign's heart, which cannot fail of foon restoring them to the royal favour, but the Americans may be driven to despair, unless a merciful providence should graciously interpose, and change the obdurate hearts of those unjust and wicked ministers, who have been fo long permitted by divine vengeance to be a fcourge both to us and our brethren. The true friends of liberty, I am fure, will not be remiss in their duty. I doubt not, my Lord, from that love of your country, and zeal for his Majesty's glory, which have equally diftinguished your Lordship, that the Livery of London will have your hearty concurrence with them, as well as your powerful intercession with the King for the revocation of the late order. Such a conduct will secure to your Lordship the esteem and affection of all good men, and add to the unfeigned respect, with which I have the honour to be, my Lord, your Lordthip's most obedient humble fervant, JOHN WILKES,

The Right Hon, the Earl of Hertford, &c.

AS the unexpected Death of the late Queen of Denmark engages the attention of the public, the following extract from Mr. Wraxhall's Tour to the Northern Parts of Europe, may not be unacceptable to our readers, more especially as he feems to have been well informed of the circumstances relating to Count Struensee, and this beautiful innocent Princels. Her unhappy fate must, we are persuaded, draw forth the sympathetic tear from the eyes of those whose hearts are susceptible of the soft impressions of humanity. May our fair country-women receive this additional example of the frailty of human grandeur, and the dreadful confequences that attend even the very appearance of vice!

Copenhagen, Tuefday 3d of May, 1774. little account of the Court, I must, however, premise, that I have not had the honour of being prefented to the Sovereign Promised in my latt letter to give you some here, as is customary with strangers from the other kingdoms of Europe. It is sufficient UNE,

portant

ftrangle

erty, belarm the

er of all

rant and were the drefs, re-

, refpec-

America.

s of the

hing civil

e throne.

esting to the first and the e we en-

I greatly

nediately

le answer

ered as a ainft our s displea-

this capi-urest inted views

emfelves,

he Sove-

foon re-

ut the Aunlefs a fly inter-hearts of

ers, who vine ven-

and our

erty, I am duty. I e of your

y's glory,

our Lord-

will have n, as well

the King

er. Such rdfhip the men, and which I

our Lord-

nt, WILKES.

ford, &c.

ns.

that I am an Englishman, not to wish it; and, indeed, with so jealous an eye are we regarded at present in this capital, that I can affure you, because I have it from the most respectable and incontestible authority, that so little an individual as myself, so humble and unknown a traveller as I am, is not only publicly talked of, but even suspected as a fpy, because I come from England, and have no avowed motive, except curiofity and knowledge. I have never, therefore, been at the levee, which is every Friday; but I go to the drawing-room, and mingle unnoticed among the crowd. I was there last night, when his Majesty, the Queen Dowager, and Prince Frederick the King's brother, were present. To give you a picture of the Court, as it now exists, I must carry you back to the time of the late celebrated and unhappy favourite Count Struensee. I have made it my endeavour, fince my arrival here, to gain the most authentic and unprejudiced intelligence respecting him, and the late extraordinary revolution which expelled a Queen from her throne and kingdom, and brought the Minister to the scaffold. I shall only inform you of fome few anecdotes which elucidate his character, and with which you may be unacquainted; though, as I never perused the printed account of his life and trial which appeared in England, you must excuse me if I repeat what you have seen there.

Struensee, as you know, had not any noble blood in his veins, or consequently any hereditary and prescriptive title to the immediate guidance of affairs of state. Fortune, and a train of peculiar circumstances, coinciding with his own talents and address, feem to have drawn him from his original mediocrity of condition, and placed him in an elevated rank. He originally practifed physic at Altona on the Elb, and afterwards attended the prefent King of Denmark on his travels into England, in quality of Phyfician. On his return, he advanced by rapid strides in the royal favour, and feems to have eminently possessed the powers of pleafing, fince he was equally the favourite of both the King and Queen. He was invested with the order of St. Matilda, instituted in honour of the Queen, created a Count, and possessed unlimited ministerial power: his conduct, in this sudden and uncommon eminence, marks a bold and daring mind; perhaps I might add, an expanded and patriotic heart. Unawed by the precarious tenor of courtly greatness, and more peculiarly of his own, he began a general reform. The state felt him through all her members : the finances, chancery, army, navy, nobles, peafants-all were fenfible of his influence. He not only dictated, but penned, his replies to every important question or dispatch; and a petition, or a scheme of public import and utility, rarely waited two hours for an answer. At present, I am told, you may be two months without receiving any. The I civil judicature of this capital was then vefted in thirty magistrates. Struensee sent a message to this tribunal, demanding to know the annual falary or pension annexed to each member. Rather alarmed at this enquiry, they fent an answer, in which they diminished their emoluments two-thirds, and estimated them at 1500, instead of 4000 rixdollars,* The Count then informed them that his Majesty had no further occasion for their fervices, but, in his royal munificence and liberality, was graciously pleased to continue to them the third part of their avowed incomes, as a proof of his fatisfaction with their conduct. He at the same time constituted another court, composed only of fix persons of approved integrity, to whom the to purge the Chancery, and other bodies of the law. Then entering on the military department, he, at one stroke, broke all the horse guards, and afterwards the regiment of Norwegian toot guards, the finest corps in the fervice, and who were not difbanded without a short but very dangerous fedition, Still proceeding in this falutary, but most critical and perilous atchievement, he ultimately began to attempt a diminution of the power of the nobles, and to fet the farmers and peafants at perfect liberty. must not, you will not wonder that he fell a victim to fuch measures, and that all parties joined in his destruction. These were his real crimes, and not that he was too acceptable to the Queen, which only formed a pretext. It was the minister, and not the man, who had become obnexious. I do not pretend, in the latter capacity, either to excuse or condemn him; but, as a politician, I rank him with the Clarendons and the Mores, whom tyranny, or public baseness, and want of virtue, have brought in almost every age to an untimely and ignominious exit; but to whose memory impartial posterity have done ample justice. Yet I must avow, that the I cannot think Struensee made a bad use, yet he certainly made a violent and imprudent one, of his extensive power. He seems, if one may judge from his actions, to have been in some measure intoxicated with royal fayour, and fuch accumulated honours, and not to have adverted fufficiently to the example which history furnishes of Wolseys in former days, and of Choifeuls in modern times, who most strikingly evince the slippery foundation of political grandeur. When he was even preffed only a short time before his feizure, to withdraw from Court, and pass the Belts, with the most ample security for his annual remitment of forty, fifty, a hundred thousand dollars, an unhappy fascination detained him, in defiance of every warning, and referved him for the prison and the block. The Queen Dowager and Prince Frederick were only the feeble instruments to produce this catastrophe, as being by the public, may not l informed Princessm the eyes by our fair adeur, and Sovereign rs from the is fufficient their rank immediately about the person of the Sovereign; though common report has talked loudly of the former's intrigue, and attributed it to her imaginary abilities. The only mark of capacity or address they exhibited, was in preserving a secrecy, which deluded Struenfee and the Queen Matilda till the time-of their being arrefted. I have been affured, that on the last levee-day preceding this event, the Count was habited with uncommon magnificence, and never received greater homage or court fervility from the croud, than when on the verge of ruin. On the night fixed for his feizure there was a Bal Paré in the Palace; the Queen, after dancing as usual one country dance with the King, gave her hand to Struensee during the rest of the evening. She retired about two in the morning, and was followed by him and Count Brandt,

K k 2 th

* A piece, value about 4s. 6d. English.

The moment was now come. The Queen Dowager and her fon Prince Frederick haftened to the King's private chamber, where he was already in bed. They kneeled down beside it, and implored him with tears and expostulations to fave himself and Denmark from impending destruction, by arresting those whom they called the authors of it. It is faid the King was not eafily induced to fign the order, but did it with reluctance and hefitation. At length their entreaties prevailed, and he affixed his fign manual to the paper. Col, Knoller Banner instantly repaired to Struenfee's apartment, which, as well as Brandt's, was in the palace; they were both seized nearly at the same instant, and, as all defence was vain, hurried away benfee stepped out of the coach, he faid ith a smile to the Commandant, who received him into custody, " I believe you are not a little furprifed at feeing me brought here a prisoner." " No, and please your Excellency," replied the old officer bluntly, " I am not at all furprised, but, on the contrary, have long expected you." It was five o'clock in the morning when the Count de Rantzau came to the door of her Majesty's anti-chamber, and knocked for admittance. One of the women about the Queen's perfon was ordered to wake her, and give her information that she was arrested. They then put her into one of the King's coaches, drove her down to Elfinoor, and fhut her up, as you know, in the caftle of Cronsberg. Mean while, as they dreaded an infurrection in Copenhagen, every military precaution was taken to prevent it; the most infamous and filly reports were circulated among the populace to render the state prisoners odious : that they had put poison in the King's coffee to destroy him; that they intended to declare him incapable of governing; to fend the Dowager Queen Juliana out of the kingdom, as well as her fon Prince Frederick, and to proclaim Matilda regent. To confirm these extraordinary and contradictory reports, the King himself and his brother appeared in a state coach, and paraded through the streets of the city to flew himfelf unburt, and as if escaped from the most horrid conspiracy, Mean while Struensce and Brandt were detained in the most rigorous imprisonment, They loaded the former with very heavy chains about his arms and legs, and he was at the same time fixed to the wall by an iron bar. I have feen the room, and can affore you it is not above ten or twelve feet fquare, with a little bed in it, and a miserable iron stove. Yet here, in this abode of misery, did he, tho' chained, complete with a pencil an account of his life and conduct as a Minister, which is penned; as I have been asfured, with uncommon genius. A tribunal was appointed for the trial of the Queen and the two Counts, and a council affigned for each, to preferve an appearance of justice and equity. You know the refult and the winding up of the whole, on the 28th of April, 1772. I must, however, mention to you some few particulars relative to Count Brandt, as they are very remarkable, and equally true; nor do I apprehend you have ever heard them.

This unfortunate man rose chiefly under Struensee's auspices, though he was originally of an honourable descent. During a refidence which the court made at one of the royal palaces, that of Heretholm, it happened that his Majesty quarrelled with Brandt, and, which was fingular enough, challenged him. This the Count, you may imagine, declined. When they meet foon after, the King repeated his defiance, called him coward; and Brandt still behaving with temper, as became a subject, he thrust his hand into his mouth, seized his tongue, and had very nearly choaked him. In this fituation can it be wondered at, that he should bite the King's finger, or strike him, or both? Self-preservation must necessarily superfede every other feeling at fuch a moment, and plead his par-don. By Struenfee's mediation the quarrel was immediately made up, and the King promifed never more to remember or refent the circumstance of his striking him. Yet was this blow, given to preferve himfelf from imminent destruction, and from the fury of an enraged man, made the pretence for his condemnation. They faid, he had lifted his hand against the King's facred perfon, which was death by the laws of Denmark. His Lawyer, I am told, made an excellent defence for him, and very forcibly remarked the effential difference between affaulting the Sovereign, and only defending himfelf from a private attack. ' One of our former Monarchs, faid he, (Christian the ' Fifth) was used frequently to unbend himfelf among his Nobles: On these occasions it was his custom to fay, " The King is ' not at home." All the Courtiers then behaved with the utmost freedom and familiarity, unreftrained by the royal presence.

red in a ftreets nd as if spiracy. vere dement. heavy

UNE

he was an iron n affore fquare, ble iron mifery, a pencil

s a Mibeen af. tribunal een and ened for juffice and the 28th of ntion to Count and eou have y under as origi-

During a e of the happen-Brandt, allenged magine, iter, the m cow-temper. and into ad very on can it eKing's -preferry other his parquarrel ie King or refent n. Yet himfelf rom the pretence he had red perof Dene an excibly reween afefending

e of our tian the nd himccafions King is then be-familirefence. 4 When

when the King is never at home?'-This feems more like the speech of an Englishman than a Dane, and breathes a manly and unfettered spirit. The skulls and bones of these unhappy men are yet exposed on wheels about a mile and a half out of town: I have viewed them with mingled commiferation and horror :-They hold up an awful and affecting leffon for future statesmen.

I have been affured, that Struenfee refigned himself to his own sentence without murmuring, or attempting to deprecate the blow; but that he expressed the utmost pity and abhorrence at the flagrant injustice committed in fentencing Count Brandt to the fame death. They have portraits of Struenfee in all the shops, with this motto round them: Mala multa Struens-se ipsum perdidit. You fee it is a miterable fort of pun upon his name, Yet, in the defiance of all the calamities of a triumphant party, the terrors of a despotic government, and the natural referve among the people, there are even here who dare to speak, though ambiguously, their genuine fentiments, 'Sir,' faid a man of fenfe and honour to me a few days fince, between ourselves, all is not as it should be; we have at prefent neither King nor Minister; and imbecility, mingled with diforder, characterises our government; the effects are too visible; the blue and white ribbons are profituted and contemptible. The finan-

When he chose to resume his kingly diginity, he faid, "The King is again at home.

But what, added he, must we do now, ces are in a worfe state than when Struenfee found them; the army devour us. In Norway, affairs are yet worfe: the King is unpopular there, and fo little is his au-' thority respected, that the Norwegians have refused, and still refuse, to pay the capita-tion tax, nor can it be levied among them. I have not amplified or exaggerated in this picture, which I really believe is too just in most of the particulars. The King has certainly fuffered much in his intellectual capacity, and they make very little fcruple in general to own it. He can play, indeed, at cards; he can dance, or go to an opera; but he is doubtless in a state of debility, which disqualifies him for the conducting or superintending affairs of national import and publie consequence; these are left to the Minifters, who tread very cautioufly, and will not presently prosecute Struensee's patriotic meafures. His fall is too recent, nor have his bones yet returned to their parent earth. There is a vacuity in his aspect, which is flrongly marked; and he is much paler and thinner than when you remember him on his tour in England. The Queen Dowager and Prince Frederick live in the palace with him, and accompany him, like his shadow, wherever he moves. The Prince has received no other mark of bounty from nature or fortune, than royal birth. He is very much deformed, and this perfonal imperfection has gained him the appellation of Richard the IIId among those who do not love the Court, though it doubtless originated a. mong the English.

LITERARY REVIEW.

Nuga Antiqua: being a Misscillaneous Collection of Original Papers in profe and werfe. Written in the reigns of Henry VIII. Queen Mary, Elizabeth, King James, &c. By Sie John lid-rington, the Translator of Ariosto, and others who lived in those times. Selected from authentic remains, by Henry Harington, jun. A. B. of Queen's College, Oxon. Vol. II. 800. 35. ferved. Robinson, London, and Frederick, Bath.

HE first volume of this miscellany (as well as the prefent) contain feveral papers worthy of being refcued from oblivion; and others which might have been fuffered to moulder in their native obscurity, without an impeachment of the author's good judgment.

The first paper in the book is a treatise on playe, by Sir John Harington, which contains feveral fentible observations. The titles of the subsequent papers are as follows: A Discourse, shewing that Elyas must perfonally come before the Day of Judgment. Pfalmes, translated by the Countess of Pembroke. The Manner of Gifts by the Kings of England unto their eldest sonnes. Order of Council to the Lord-mayor of London,

We next meet with a letter from Sir R. Cecil, to Sir John Harington, in 1603, with Houshold Rules and Ordinances for Servants, As this paper ferves to give an idea of the domettic economy of the age, we mail infert it entire.

" My Noble Knyght,

"My thankes come wythe your papers and wholefome statutes for your fathers house-holde. I shall, as far as in me lieth, patterne the fame, and geue good heed for due observaunce thereof in my own state. Your father did muche affect fuche prudence; nor dothe his fonne lesse followe his faire fample, of worthe learninge and honor. I shall not faile to keep your grace and favor quick and lively in the kinges breafte, as far as good discretion guideth me, so as not to hazard my own reputation for humble fuing, rather than bold and forward entreaties. You know all my former steppes; good knyght, refte contente, and give heed to one that hath forrowde in the bright luftre of a courte, and gone heavily even on the best seeminge faire grounde. 'Tis a great talke to prove ones honestye, and yet not spoil ones fortune. You have tafted a little hereof in our bleffed queenes tyme, who was more than a man, and, in troth, fometyme less than a woman. I wishe I waited now in your presence-chamber, with eafe at my foode, and refte in my bedde: I am puthed from the thore of comforte, and know not where the wyndes and waves of a court will bear me; I know it bringeth little comforte on earthe; and he is, I reckon, no wife man that looketh this waye to heaven; we have much ftirre aboute counceils, and more aboute honors. Many knyghts were made at Theobalds, duringe the kynges staye at myne house, and more to be made in the citie. My father had muche wisdom in directing the state; and I wyshe I could bear my parte fo discretely as he did. Farewel, good knyght; but never come neare London till I call you. Too much crowdinge doth not well for a cripple, and the kynge dothe finde fcante room to fit himfelf, he hath so many friends as they chuse to be called, and heaven prove they lye not in the end, In trouble, hurrying, feigning, fuing, and fuche-like matters, I nowe refte Your true friende, 29 May 1603. R. CECIL.

"Orders for Household Servantes; first deuised by John Haryngton, in the yeare 1566, and reneved by John Haryngton, sonne of the saide John, in the yeare 1592; the saide John, the sonne, being then High Shrieve of the county of Somerset.

"Imprimis, That no feruant bee abfent from praier, at morning or evening, without a lawful excufe, to be alledged within one day after, vppon paine to forfeit for every tyme 2d.

" II. Item, That none fwear any othe, vppon pain for every othe 1d.

"HI. Item, That no man leaue any doore open that he findeth shut, without theare bee c. use, vppon paine for every tyme 1d.

c.ufe, vppon paine for every tyme 1d.

"IV. Item, That none of the men be in bed, from our Lady-day to Michaelmas, after 6 of the clock in the morning; nor out of his bed after 10 of the clock at night; nor from Michaelmas till our Lady-day, in bed after 7 in the morning, nor out after 9 at night, without reasonable cause, on paine of 2d.

"V. Item, That no mans bed bee vnmade, nor fire or candle-box vncleane, after 8 of the clock in the morning, on paine of id.

"VI. Item, That no man make water within either of the courts, vppon paine of, euery tyme it shal be proued, id.

"VII. Item, That no man teach any of the children any vnhonest speeche, or baudie word, or othe, on paine of 4d.

" VIII. Item, That no man waite at the table without a trencher in his hand, except it be uppon some good cause, on paine of id.

"IX. Item, That no man appointed to waite at my table be abfent that meale, without reasonable cause, on paine of 1d.

"X. Item, If any man breake a glaffee, hee shall aunswer the price thereof out of his wages; and, if it bee not known who breake it, the buttler shall pay for it, on paine of 12d.

"XI. Item, The table must bee covered halfe an houer before 11 at dinner, and 6 at supper, or before, on paine of 2d.

or before at dinner, and 6 or before at fupper, on paine of 6d.

"XII. Item, That none be abfent, with.

"XIII. Item, That none be absent, without leave, or good cause, the whole day, or more part of it, on paine of 4d.

"XIV. Item, That no man firike his fellow, on paine of loffe of fervice; nor reuile or threaten, or prouoke an other to firike, on paine of 12d.

"XV. Item, That no man come to the kitchen without reafonable cause, on paine of 1d, and the cook likewise to forseit 1d.
"XVI. Item, That none toy with the maids, on paine of 4d.

"XVII. Item, That no man weare foule thirt on Sunday, nor broken hofe, or shoes, or dublett without buttons, on paine of id.

"XVIII. Item, That when any frainger goeth hence, the chamber be dreft up againe within 4 hours after, on paine of id.

"XIX. Item, That the hall bee made cleane euery day, by eight in the winter, and feauen in the formmer, on paine of him that should do it to forfet Id.

" XX. That the cowrt-gate be shutt each meale, and not opened during dinner and supper, without just cause, on paine the porter to forfet for euery time, 1d.

"XXI. Item, That all ftayrs in the houfe, and other rooms that neede shall require, bee made cleane on Fryday after dinner, on paine of forfeyture of euery on whome it shall belong vnto, 3d.

"All which fommes that be duly paide each quarter-day out of their wages, and beftowed on the poore, or other godly vie."

The articles next in order are, Parliament Matters in 1628 and Times enfuing. The Duke of Buckingham's Speeche to his Majeftie, at the Counfell-Table. His Majeftie's Answer to the Petition concerning Religion, Sir Francis Seymour's Speech in the House of Commons, March 22, 1627. Sir Thomas Wentworth's Speeche the fame day. Letter to Lord Thomas Howarde, from J. H. Sir John Haryngton to Sir Amias Pawlet, Copy of a Letter from Sir John Haryngton to Prince Henry, fon to King James I. concerning his Dogge.

Now, fays the honest knight in this letter, let Ulysses praise his dogge Argus, or Tobite be led by that dogge whose name doth not appear; yet could I say such things

UNE, of my Bungey, for fo was he flyled, as might except shame them both, either for good faith, clear wit, or wonderful deedes; to fay no more than I have faid of his bearing letters from inted to e, with-London and Greenwiche, more than an hun-

Next follows the life of John, Lord Harington, Baron of Exton, 1612; and a great variety of entertaining pieces in profe and verse, for the particulars of which we beg leave to refer our readers to the work itfelf .- Critical Review.

The Country Justice; a poem. By one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the County of Somerfet. Part II. 4to. 15. 6d. Becket.

THE fame spirit of poetry and humanity breathes through this Second Part that animated the First. The Author has taken for the text of this part, " The Protection of the Poor," and has spoke more home to the feeling heart and rational mind than all the popular preachers of all the tabernacles and methodist chapels in town. He has also indulged a laudable vein of fatire on the evils ariting from a deferted country and overgrown metropolis. We are unwilling to rifle this poetical garden with a spoiler's hand, yet we cannot refift the temptation of gracing our page with the following extract, which we hope will not be deemed too large a trefpals on the Author's property:

O days long loft to man in each degree! The golden days of Hospitality! When liberal fortunes vied with liberal strife To fill the noblest offices of life;

When Wealth was Virtue's handmaid, and her gate Gave a free refuge from the wrongs of Fate; The poor at hand their natural patrons faw, And law-givers were supplements of law!

Lost are those days, and Faskion's boundless sway

Has borne the Guardian Magistrate away. Save in Augusta's streets, on Gallia's shore, The rural patron is beheld no more. No more the poor his kind protection share, Unknown their wants, and unreceiv'd their prayer,

Yet has that Fashion, long so light and vain, Reform'd at last, and led the moral train? Have her gay vot'ries nobler worth to boaft For Nature's love, for Nature's virtue loft? No-fled from thefe, the fons of fortune find What poor respect to Wealth remains behind. The meck regard alone of menial flaves, The worthip'd calves of their outwitting knaves!

Foregone the focial, hospitable days, When wide vales echoed with their owner's Of all that ancient consequence bereft,

What has the modern Man of Fashion left?

Does he, perchance, to rural fcenes repair, And 'waite his fweetness' on the effenc'd air?

Ah! gently lave the feeble frame he brings, Ye scouring seas! and ye sulphureous springs!

And thou, Brighthelmstone, where no cits annoy

(All borne to Margate in the Margate Hoy) Where, if the hasty creditor advance, Lies the light skiff, and ever-bailing France, Do thou defend him in the dog-day suns! Secure in winter from the rage of duns!

While the grim catchpole, the grim porter fwear,

One that he is, and one, he is not there, The tortur'd Us'rer, as he murmurs by, Eyes the Venetian blinds, and heaves a figh.

O, from each title Folly ever took, Blood! Maccarone! Cicifbeo! or Rook! From each low paffion, from each low refort, The thieving alley, nay, the righteous court, From Bertie's, Almack's, Arthur's, and the neft Where Judah's ferrets earth with Charles unbleft !-

From these, and all the garbage of the great, At Honour's, Freedom's, Virtue's callretreat!

This fecond part is introduced by a poetical dedication, not only diftinguished by rich imagery and flowing verification, but written in a strain of morality that might serve to put to shame many addresses in adulatory profe .- Monthly Rev.

A Liturgy on the principles of the Christian Religion, 25. Kearfly.

TO give our Readers an idea of the mode of composition which prevails in this Liturgy, where the prayers are not borrowed from others, we have felected from the evening fervice the following general thankfgiving:

" Almighty and everlasting God, whose glorious name is exalted above all bleffing and praise, who standest not in need of any homage that men or angels can pay unto thee: mercifully regard the humble praifes we now offer; though we cannot find out the Almighty unto perfection, or show forth all thy glory. And grant, that hereby we may be better disposed to conform ourselves to thy likeness in all the moral excellencies of thy nature, and yield a cheerful reverence and fubmiffion to thy fovereign will in all things. Preferve on our minds a constant sense of thy persections, of thy domion over, and grace unto us; that we may be engaged to forfake, with humble penitence, all our past fins, and to live in the unwearied practice of universal goodness; that we may glorify thee in the best manner we are capable of in this world; and be fitted for, and in the end, be admitted into a more perfect life of duty and appiness with thee in heaven, through Jefus Christ our Lord. Amen."

The services for the Lord's Supper, baptifm, &c. may be of fome use to those who do not perform thefe offices according to the established ritual. The collection of Pfalms of id. glaffee, f out of wn who r it, on couered and 6 at die at 11 at fupt, withday, or his felor reuile rike, on e to the on paine eit id. with the are foule r fhooes, e of id. Arainger p againe ee made nter, and him that utt each nner and the porhe house, uire, bee on paine shall be-

and berliament ng. The his Ma-Majestic's

Religion.

aide each

he House Thomas ay. Letom J. H. Pawlet, aryngton s I. cont in this Argus, or ofe name ch things is almost entirely copied from that which is annexed to the Liverpool liturgy.

Perhaps, after all the attempts which have been made in this way, a liturgy formed on truly liberal principles, and executed in the ftyle and manner most proper for public acts of devotion, is still to be reckoned among the defiderata in religion. There is fo much difficulty in this species of composition, that it requires no common share of ability and taste to execute it with fuccefs. The ideas ought to be philosophically just, yet not raised above the easy comprehension of the multitude, nor far removed from their vival manner of thinking. The method should be clear and distinct; and might, perhaps with advantage, be confiderably varied from that which is at prefent generally adopted. The language should be plain and simple, that it may not become tiresome by repetition; free from all scholastic words and phrases, that it may be easily understood; and neither debased by vulgarisms, nor decked out with antithesis and conceit: at the same time, it should be raised above the familiar style, by a certain disposition of words and structure of periods, which shall give harmony and dignity to the whole. Of this kind of writing, the liturgy of the church of England is doubtless the best model. By a careful imitation of this model, with the aid of just princiles, and a correct tafte, it would perhaps possible to frame a liturgy much more worthy of the public notice, than any which has hitherto appeared .--Monthly Rev.

The Speech of Lord Lyttleton, on a Motion made in the House of Lords for a Repeal of the Canada Bill, May 17, 1775. 4to, 1s. Ridley.

We have here a sample of senatorial oratory, spirited, pointed, and concise. It is not for us to decide on the justice and propriety of the arguments advanced by the noble speaker, but to exhibit such a specimen as may induce our readers to perufe the whole, and judge for themfelves. The clamour, that has been raifed by the opposition against the Quebec bill or Canada act, has been fo very general, and the state of popery and flavery, into which the inhabitants of that colony are faid to be reduced by it, has been so industriously aggravated, and reprefented to the public, that it was no wonder a repeal of it was moved in parliament by the patriots in the minority. It was in the debate on this occasion that Lord Lyttleton diffinguished himself, in a manner by no means unworthy of his promifing abilities. His exordium, as it should be, is without affectation, pertinent, and proper.

"At the conclusion of this long and laborious session of parliament, when the unhappy divisions substitute between England and America seemed, by the joint wisdom of both houses, to converge towards conciliaion, I am greatly surprised that the noble and learned Lord should come forth again to featter abroad the feeds of diffention, and, not content with that refiftance to the legif. larure, and to the law of England, which prevails over all British America, should now endeavour to involve the Canadians in the common revolt; establishing as a leading principle, by which your Lordships may be induced to repeal this bill; that those for whose emolument it was made are the most diffatisfied with it-that they groan under the pressure, and consider it as a most intolerable grievance—PAINTING their diflike to it with the strongest colours of rhetoric, and, by these groundless infinuations, withing to deprive them of all those beneficial advantages, they most gratefully acknowledge to have received, by the equitable fystem of jurisprudence obtained from the parliament of England.

"My Lords, however bright may be the eloquence, and however dark the purpofs, of that noble and learned Lord, I truft he will fail in his attempt; and though strong was the arm that directed this shaft against the vitals of the constitution, though the point was envenomed, and though it was aimed at a mortal part, I trust, my Lords, it will fall blunted to the ground, without endangering the safety of the commonwealth, or affecting the true interest of the kingdom."

His Lordship needed no great foresight to prove a true prophet in this particular. The attempt has failed, though apparently softered by some of the first and most respectable personages in the kingdom. Whether they were all equally in earnest, or had any such dark purpose, in seconding such attempt, as is here imputed to the learned law Lord who first moved it, is a matter to be questioned; at least as much so as the sincerity with which the noble author of the present speech opposed it. His Lordship's general sense of the bill is given in a very sew words.

"The noble Lord has told your Lordships, that the bill which paffed last fession for establishing a government in Canada, was abill abhorrent to the British constitution, and that it ought to be repealed by the unanimous voice of this house.'-- I shall first put his Lordship in mind, that this bill was not made for the meridian of England; that it was framed for the conquered subjects of France, confonant to the faith of treatife, and to the stipulations agreed upon by the conqueror, which was part of the folemn pact, between Great Britain and France, covenanted for, and ratified by, both nations at the conclusion of the war: and then, my Lords, I will go a ftep further; I will meet the noble Lord on his own ground; and I will uphold to his Lordship, that the general principles and policy of this Canada bill were founded in wifdom-that the principles of it, which his Lordship affirms to be repugnant to christianity, emaned from the gospel, and are coeval with the religion of our Saviour-that

UNE.

y be the

purpofe, I truft he

gh ftrong

t against ough the h it was

Lords, it

thout enwealth, or relight to

lar. The

ently fofrespecta-

Whether

r had any attempt.

law Lord

be quef-

e fincerity

he present s general

w words,

Lordships,

n for efta-

was abill

and that it

voice of this ordship in de for the ramed for confonant

ne stipula-

or, which een Great

r, and raclusion of will go a le Lord on old to his

es and po-

ded in wif-

which his to christi-

nd are coe.

iour-that they ngdom.

they breathe forth the spirit of their divine again to Mafter; for they are neither principles of on, and, popery or fervitude-they are principles, my he legif. Lords, of toleration, unrestrained by preju-dice, and unsettered by absurd and odious , which uld new restrictions. The inhabitants of Canada were s in the leading catholicks before they were conquered by England; they are catholicks now, but unmay be hofe for der the jurisdiction of a potestant parliament, and under the cognifance of protestant bithe most shops, who form a part of that parliament, n under oft intoand who, I believe, were unanimous in allowing them the free exercise of their relir diflike gion. In regard to the policy of the bill, I rhetoric, cannot but think it to be indifputably ex-cellent, because it tends, by the beneficence s, withficial adof its aspect, to remove those rooted prejunowledge fyftem of dices, which are carefully inftilled into the arliament minds of all the subjects of France, against the laws and the constitution of England," of the nature Having thus given his and tendency of the act, his Lordship adduces but a few arguments in support of his opinion; turning the whole battery of his rhetoric against the mover* for its repeal; whom he charges with being actuated merely from motives of perplexing and diffreffing administration; and having advanced fentiments less becoming himself than a factious burgher of Geneva.

" But, continues his Lordship, we have feen enough of republican government-enough of that leveiling principle, which pulls down every thing and fets up nothing-of that furious ungovernable spirit, which rifes against all order and subordination, which militates against all power which it cannot invade, and would deftroy all government which it does not poffefs. My Lords, the constitution of England abhors all despotism: It equally abhors the defpotism of one man, and the tyranny of the uncounted multitude! The medium between both is what it delights in :- It delights in freedom, guarded and governed by law under the controll and protection of the three powers of the state, king, lords, and commons, in parliament affembled,-But this happy and most envied state, with which God has blessed us, does not flatter the ambitious purposes of the noble and learned Lord : He has therefore employed all his talents, and all his learning, to conjure up a noxious spirit, both in England and America; a spirit which assumes the fair form of liberty, that it may more furely destroy legal and constitutional freedom.-This spirit, which has possessed and animated all his Lordship's speeches, has told the Americans, that they were betreayd into flavery; it has told them to refift, because refistance was legal when liberty was oppreffed;-it has told them, that the cafe of thip-money, which began the civil strife in England in Charles the First's time, and which ended in the extinction of tyranny by the death of the tyrant, was a trifle light as Lord Camden.

MISCEL, Vol. III, LI

air to the afflictive despotism under the lash of which the Americans groaned; -it has told them, that their ALL was at stake, their lives and their properties .- This was the language held forth within thefe walls, and from these walls re-echoed to America,-It was here, my Lords, here that these opinions were broached: And can you wonder at the effect they have produced? Can you wonder that, urged on by men of fuch exceeding weight, the colonists thould have taken the alarm; or that it should have spread, like a pestiferous difease, from the mountains of New-York down to the gulph of Mexico? To whom then are you to afcribe these disorders? At suhofe door then are thefe calamities to be laid, which have shaken the peace of the kingdom? To the misled, to the infatuated Americans? or to the perfidious counfellors, whose atrocious policy has involved them and us in common destruction? Is it credible, my Lords, that fo long as the great interpreters of the law in this house, men of fuperior talents, and deeply versed in the science of the constitution, proclaim aloud that their fellow-subjects on the other side of the Atlantic are cramped and fettered in flaveryis it credible that they should submit to any government, or ever think themselves in a itate of freedom?"

" And yet, fays the noble fpeaker, the learned Lord, in whom the spirit of opposttion shines bright, has summoned your Lordships to come down this day, at the close of the feffions, to hear him harangue upon the laws of nations, and upon the various degrees and modifications of freedom: And, whilst his Lordship is thundering forth invectives against the administration; whilst he is cavilling at all they have already done, and at all they intend to do; while, in confequence of these domestic jars, your legions have been fent across the Atlantic, to shake their banners in fields of peace, and to compel those infatuated men to obedience, who would have been better and more effectually bound by the energy of acts of parliament; the enemy, the common enemy, has prepared a force superior to any you have to oppofe her. - Spain, my Lords, Spain, panting for war, and eager for revenge, Spain has at this time a force sufficient to possess herself of Gibraltar; to take in, without a blow, famaica, Barbadoes, and all the Leeward Islands-a force sufficient to rend Ireland from the imperial crown of these kingdoms, and fufficient, if the durft tempt the adventure, to plant her standard upon English ground; to invade even Great-Britain, guarded as she is by the ocean, and hitherto unaffailable by foreign arms.

As the King's Ministers, however, have fince declared that our fears from Spain are groundless, we hope their pretended military preparations will have no worfe effect than that of affording room for raising a few rhetorical flowers, to grace his Lordship's elocution .- London Rev.

Travels through Portugal and Spain, in 1772 and 1773. By Richard Twifs, Figs F. R. S. With Copper-plates 3 and an Appendix. 4to. 11.11s. 6d. in boards. Robinson.

THE author of these Travels appears to be one of the sew gentlemen of fortune who, feorning the frivolous dissipation of the age, prefer the visiting foreign countries to the unmanly amusements which at present so greatly prevail within the circle of sahionable life. We find, that before his excursion to Spain and Portugal, he has not only surveyed the different parts of Great-Britain, which is a journey too seldom performed by the youth of our country, but has also traversed a greater extent of the Continent than is usually visited on the grand tour.

For finishing a polite education, or for gratifying curiofity with the monuments of ancient genius and magnificence, Spain and Portugal are undoubtedly less attractive to a traveller than the more polished countries of Europe; but it is certain that knowledge may be improved in fome degree, by viewing the manners of the rudest, as well as by an intercourse with the most civilized nations. Human nature is univerfally the same in all; and where we cannot collect any valuable acquifition to the arts or sciences, we may at least behold the inconveniencies that arise from the deficiency of them. The world was but little advanced in civilization when Ulyffes attained fo great wildom by visiting various cities and people of different nations, that he is celebrated as the great example of olitical knowledge and fagacity.

Mr. Twifs embarked on board one of the packets at Falmouth, on the 12th of November, 1772, and on the 17th landed at Lifson. This city, he informs us, continues nearly in the fame ruinous flate to which it was reduced by the earthquake in 1755. Like Rome, it is built on feven hills, and the streets are very badly paved with sharp stones; nor are they lighted at night. The houses are generally two stories high, sometimes three, without any other chimney than that of the kitchen. Some of our readers, perhaps, will be surprised to know, that there is no newspaper or gazette in the Portuguese language, being prohibited in 1763.

Mr. Twifs informs us, that he went to the palace of Bellem, to hear the Italian opera of Ezo performed. To this entertainment no ladies are ever admitted, nor are there any aftrefies. Inflead of women, the female charafters are perfonated by cunuchs, who are dreffed in the habit of the fex they reprefent. This uncommon exhibition, we are told, is caused by the jealousy of the Queen.

In the account of one of the excursions which our author made from Liston, he describes the dance called fandango, the motions in which are very indecent.—The chief order of knighthood in Portugal is called The Order of Civis, and was intituted in 1283.

This order, which is given to any person who is not a heretic, is so common, that Mr. Twifs observes, it is almost a disgrace to accept of it, though worn by the King himfelf. He has seen a valet de chambre, the keeper of a billiard table, and a musician, decorated with its infignia. In Portugal, nobility is not hereditary, but conferred in the same manner as knighthood is in England.

The ladies here ride on burres, or jack. aftes, with a pack-faddle; a fervant attends with a fharp flick, which he uses in place of a whip; and for retarding the beast when it goes too fast, the expedient is to pull it by the tail. We shall present our readers with the following account of the dress, and some of the customs of the Portuguese.

"The drefs of the men, among the common people, is a large cloak and flouched hat; under the cloak they commonly wear a dagger, though that treacherous weapon is prohibited: the blades of fome of these will ftrike through a crown piece. The women wear no caps, but tie a kind of net-work slike purse over their hair, with a long tassel behind, and a ribbon tied in a bow-knot over their forehead. This head drefs they call redecilla, and it is worn indiscriminately by both sexes. The London caricatures of Macaroni hair-clubs are not at all exaggerated when applied to the Portuguese. The genery drefs entirely in the French sassing.

"The ladies wear very large and heavy pendants in their ears: the fleeves of their gowns are wide enough to admit their waif, which, however, feldom exceeds a span in diameter."

"Towards the latter end of January I had determined to fet out for Oporto, but I deferred my journey a few days, in order to be present at a singular execution, which was that of a man to be burnt alive. He was condemned for stealing the plate and vestments out of a church, and afterwards firing it, to conceal the theft. He had been a year in prison, and was dragged from thence to the church he had burnt, tied by the legs to the tails of two horses; but the friars of the Misericordia had placed him on an ox's hide, fo that he did not fuffer much. Before the church was fixed a flake with a feat, on a scaffold elevated about fix feet, under which faggots, torches, pitch-barrels, & other combustible materials were placed. The scaffold was environed by a regiment of cavalry, behind which flood most of the monks of Lifbon, who had joined in the procession. He was fattened to the stake at half an hour past five, and fire was immediately put underneath the scaffold. In five-and-twenty minutes all was reduced to ashes. The rope which tied his neck to the stake was foon burnt, and then his body fell into the fire, He was probably stifled with the smoke before the flames reached him: the fire afterwards penetrated between his ribs, which were shortly confumed. This spectacle was JUNE,

y person non, that isgrace to ing him-mbre, the musician, Portugal

Portugal, portugal, oferred in England, or jack-et attends place of t when it ull it by lers with and fome the com-flouched only wear weapon is these will e women work filk taffel be-not over ny call re-lately by as of Ma-aggerated The genon.

Id heavy of their oir waift, fpan in

ary I had but I de-der to be hich was

He was ds firing the average of the control of the control before Abo conver beauti

From twenty ported to be confur On at Alo Febru ed to : cular mous of St. palace pictur Aft ed to fteep ed to fleep gus. bitant ty-fiv is rep build the d and t Mr city i

into wife trade they to clade they allow they allow they allow the fent of bull-the fi

bullthe fiveller main stabl behin be ke from fix fi bulls the t to b door

door had coy very The dift opp

opp to e figr very tremendous and awful. It was dark before the fire was put to the fcaffold,'

About four leagues from Lifbon stands the convent of Odivelas, where, it is faid, 300 beautiful nuns formed a feraglio for the late king; and where each of the ladies had one or more lovers among the men of quality.

From the city of Oporto, we are told, that twenty thousand pipes of wine are yearly exported; fixty thousand, which is computed to be the remainder of the produce, being confumed in the country.

On quitting Portugal, our traveller arrived at Almeida, in Spain, towards the end of February, 1773; and foon after he proceeded to Salamanca, of which he gives a particular description. He next describes the fa-mous aqueduct of Segovia, the royal palaces of St. Ildefonfo, the Efcorial, and the new palace of Madrid, with an account of the pictures, paintings, &c.

After leaving Madrid Mr. Twifs proceeded to Toledo, an ancient city built on a very fleep hill, and nearly environed by the Tagus. We are told that the number of inhabitants, at present, hardly amounts to twen-ty-five thousand. The cathedral of this city is represented to be one of the largest Gothic buildings in Europe, and is honoured with the diftinction of always having the Pope and the King of Spain as its canons.

Mr. Twifs informs us, that in every large city in Spain there is a foundling hospital, into which all children are readily admitted; not only fuch as are illegitimate, but likewife those belonging to the lower class of tradesmen, who have larger families than they can support. When the parents chuse to claim the child, they may have it again on describing it. The author afterwards leads us to Carthagena, Granada, Alhambra, &c. all of which he minutely defcribes, and also the roads between them. We shall prefent our readers with Mr. Twifs's account of a bull-fight, as that which he faw differed from the spectacles described by our modern travellers under the fame title.

" Every thing being ready, the bulls remained to be driven across the area from the stables where they were, to a fmaller stable behind the amphitheatre, where each was to be kept apart. The first stable was not far from the amphitheatre, and a wall of boards fix feet high was put up the whole way the bulls were to pass. At a quarter past four the ten bulls were let into the area, in order to be put into the stables at the opposite door: a man on foot led a tame ox, which had been bred with the bulls, before, to decoy them into thefe: they followed the ox very quietly; but they do not always do fo. The three horsemen placed themselves at some distance, one on each fide of, and the other opposite to the door at which the bull was to enter: a trumpet was then founded as a fignal to let a built in, and the man who opened the door got behind it immediately.

" During this last quarter of an hour the. bulls had been teafed by pricking them in the backs : this is done by perfons placed on the ceiling of the stables, which was low, and confifted only of a plank laid here and there, and between those planks was space enough to use any instrument for that purpose. The bulls were distinguished by a fmall knot of ribbon fixed to their shoulders, the different colours of which shew where they were bred, which is known by the advertisements.

"The bull made at the first horseman, who received it on the point of the spear, held in the middle tight to his fide, and paffing under his arm pit, which making a wide gath in the bull's shoulder, occasioned it to draw back, the blood running in torrents: the force with which the bull ran at the man was so great, that the shock had nearly overfet him and his horfe. It was then another man's turn to wound the bull, as only one is to cope with it at a time. They are never allowed to attack the buil, but ? must wait the animal's approach. The built trotted into the middle of the area, and stared about, frighted by the clapping and hailooing of the multitude. The nian on horseback always facing the beaft, and turning when it turned: it then ran at the horse, and got another wound in the breaft, and a third from the next horseman it attacked. It was now become mad with pain, the blood iffuing from its mouth in streams, and faintness made it ftagger; its eyes "flashed fury," it pawed up the ground, and tashed its sides with its tail; its breath was impetuously discharged like smoke from its nostrils, so that its head appeared as if in a mift. A trumpet then founded, which was a fignal for the horsemen to retire; and the men on foot began their attack, Hicking barbed darts into every part of its body; the torture they inflicted made the bull leap from the ground, and run furiously at one of the men, who jumped afide; the bull then turned to another man, who had just stuck a dart into his back: the man took to his heels, and leaped over the rails, where he was fafe: in this manner all the men continued tormenting the bull, who could hardly fland through loss of blood. The trumpet then founded again, upon which the matador appeared, with a cloak extended on a short stick in his left hand, and in his right a two-edged fword, the blade of which was flat, 4 inches broad, and a yard long; he stood still, and at the moment the bull in the agonies of despair and death, made at him, he plunged the fword into the fpine behind the beaft's horns, which instantly made it drop down dead, If the matador miffes his aim, and cannot defend himfelf with the cloak, he lofes his life, as the bull exerts all its remaining ftrength with an almost inconceivable furv. The dead buil was immediately dragged out of the area by three horfes on a full gallop, 115

F

G

And

Boldl

Bid A

With

And

Shew

Th' e

Shew

Pleas

In ar

And

When

Then

Thou

The If Ch

And

Let S Thefe

Could

And

Thro

Thro

No fe

And

Henc

Free

Elfe |

Or (

No fi

Reaso

*

gone o rally

the 36

to this

1 tucre

He

whose traces were fastened to its horns. quarter of an hour was elapsed, which is the time allowed for the murder of each bull, five minutes to the horsemen, five to the footmen, and five to the flayer,

" Another bull was then let in: this was the wildest and most furious of any I ever The horseman missed his aim, and the bull thrust his horns into the horse's belly, making the bowels hang out : the horse became ungovernable, fo that the man was obliged to difmount and abandon it to the bull, who purfued it round the area, till the horse fell and expired. Four other horses were successively killed by this bull, which till then, had only received flight wounds, tho' one of the horses had kicked its jaw to pieces. One of the horsemen broke his spear in the bull's neck, and horse and rider fell to the ground; the rider broke his leg, and was carried off. The footmen then fell to work again, and afterwards the matador put an end to the life of this valiant animal, whose Arength and courage were unavailing to fave it. The third bull killed two horfes, goring them under the belly, so that the intestines hung trailing on the ground. The feventh bull likewife killed two horfes. In this man-The feventh ner were ten bulls maffacred, and the whole concluded in two hours and a half. The bulls flesh was immediately fold to the populace at ten quartos per pound, which is out three pence.

When the last bull had been sufficiently wounded by the horsemen, the mob were allowed to enter the area; they attacked the bull on all fides, and killed it with their knives and daggers. The bull fometimes toffes fome of thefe fellows over its head."

Through the whole of this excursion Mr. Twifs evidently appears to have been extremely attentive in his observations, which he has likewife related with great minutenefs, -- Crit. Rev.

*********** LIST of NEW PUBLICATIONS.

HE Conflitution of England, or an account of the English government; in which it is compared with the Republican Form of Government, and occasionally with the other Monarchies in Europe, By J. L. De Lolme, Advocate, Citizen of Geneva. 8vo. 109. 6d. boards. Kearfly .--Those who have paid little attention to the Subject of this volume, will here meet with fuch an account of the constitution of England, as may be sufficient for the full gratification of their curiofity, and which likewife cannot fail to excite the amor patrix in the breaft of an Englishman,-Crit. Rev

Confiderations on India Affairs; part II. Containing a complete vindication of the author from the malicious and groundlefs charges of Mr. Verelft. By William Bolts. 4to. Il 10s. in boards .- Thefe volumes contain a very great variety of curious particulars, original letters, and public papers, retative to the affairs of our East India Company, Sc. -

The Accidence; or, first Rudiments of English Grammar, defigned for the Use of young Ladies. By a Lady, 12mo. 1s, 6d, Beecroft.—This Accidence (faid to be written by Mrs. Davis, a teacher at Cambden-house school) is a judicious selection from the best writers on the Subject of English grammar; the rules of which are given with great perspicuity and simplicity, and illustrated by well-chosen examples.

The Adventures of a Cork-Screw; in which, under the pleafing method of a romance, the vices, follies, and manners of the present age are exhibited and fatirically delinested. Interspersed with striking anecdotes, characters and actions of men in real life; all drawn to promote virtue, expose vice, and laugh folly out of countenance, 12mo, 38,

Bell .- Amufing

A concife System of Geography: wherein the first principles of the science are laid down in a plain and eafy manner, fuited to the capacities of youth, 8vo. 3s. 6d. fewed, Devizes printed.

The Sick Man's Employ; or, Views of Death and Eternity realized. Occasioned by a violent fit of the Stone, By John Faw-Occasioned by cett, 12mo, 6d. Keith, &c .- Worthy the attention of those who are in health and tranquility, in order to prepare them for times of fickness and diffress.

The History and Antiquities of Winchefter. 2 vols. 6s. Winton printed; and fold by Crowder, &c. in London.

Genuine memoirs of Mess. Perreau, 12mo. 3s. Kearsly .- The most fatisfactory account that has yet appeared.

The Feathers, a tale; or Venus surpassed by a Beauty in Grofvenor-square. Inscribed to a fair-plumed Duchefs. 4to. 15. Bladon, Claocina; a comi-tragedy. 4to. 15. 6d.

Kearfly .--Humorous.

The Conclave of 1774. A musical drama, In Italian and English. Rome printed; London reprinted. 8vo. 28. Dilly .- A burlefque on the election of the Pope.

POLITICAL PAMPHLETS.

An Inquiry into the Policy of the Penal Laws, affecting the Popish Inhabitants of Ireland. 8vo. 3s. Robinson.—A spirited and judicious remonstrance in behalf of the lower class of people, particularly those of the Roman Catholic persuasion, in Ireland.

The Origin of the American Contest with Great-Britain, or the present state of the Maffachusetts-Bay, in general, and the town of Bofton in particular. Exhibiting the rife and progress of the disordered state of that country, in a feries of weekly effays, published at Bofton, under the fignature of Maffachusettenfis, by a native of New-England. 8vo. 18. 6d. New-York, printed by James Rivington.---Sold in London by Richardson & Urquhart,

An Effay on the Nature of Colonies, and the conduct of the Mother Country towards them. 8vo. 1s. 6d. Johnson.

FLOWERS

of

d.

ol) the ich

ty,

in

he li.

es,

e; nd

35.

ein aid

to ed.

of

by

w.

at-ity,

ef-

old

that ffed

bed

on,

6d.

na,

on-que

enal

of

and class

holic

rith

faf-

of

and nn.

d at fet-

Svo.

Ri-

n &

and irds

RS

AL THE THE THE THE ## FLOWERS OF PARNASSUS.

For the MONTHLY MISCELLANY. OMNIPOTENCE.

- Deum namque ire per omnes, Terrasque, tractusque Maris, Coelumque pro-VIRG. Georg. 4.

O, daring foul! go mount the bleft a-God: bode ! And climb the heav'ns, and trace a ruling Boldly affert the mighty Maker's cause ! Bid Atheists tremble from unerring laws: With eager eyes go Nature's paths explore ! And let the Sceptic vainly vaunt no more: Shew whence this beauteous shell,-and whence began

Th' enliv'ning foul, the origin of man: Shew from what fource the wand'ring planets stray, Pleas'd to revere the Potentate of Day; In ambient gyres they tread th' expansive round, And diftant regions hear the * heav'nly found: Whence folid matter to existence came,

Then, embryo like, assum'd this pleasing frame [light; Thousands of stars adorn with glimm'ring The crouded pole, and gild the glowing night. If Chance fhould govern and direct the whole, And be thro' all the vivifying foul,

Let Sceptics fay, by what new motion given, These atoms knew the wilderness of heaven; Could skim thre' liquid fields, before unknown. [own. And meet and range + with fenses not their Thro' untry'd regions, could they ever ftray, Thro' undetermin'd fpace, an endless way; No fenfe to rule them in th' uncertain road, Ander'ry path without their knowledge trod?

Hence are we taught fome power supreme to fear.

And him, as Author of the World, revere : Hence reason shews, this heavenly Monarch reigns. chains;

Free from the clog of matter's pond'rous Else had the fluggish lump inactive laid, Or (what's more true) perhaps been never madet ; No fubtile spark of fine ætherial fire, Reason to curb the will, and rule defire.

* Alluding to the 19th Pfalm. Their found is gone out into all lands. This line only proves that matter is not naturally a cogitative substance; it is the business of the 36th line to prove, that matter cannot be made to think by any modification of it.

1 Matter could not be eternal (for whatever is tternal is independent) unless an eternal creation were poffible.

Whence isfu'd fense? how came we first to know ?

For fleepy atoms could not thought beffow; In various orders bid them swiftly run, Whisk thro' the air till thought begin to burn; Till glowing fense awake the lifeless mass, And reas'ning mortals vegetate like grafs; Till matter feel a pungent fense of pain, This you may try, but ages try in vain. No more let fools in science dream of chance, How giddy atoms, thro' the vast expanse, Wheel'd by themselves in curves & harmonious dance.

So fabled dæmons winding circles run, Till the first redd'ning of the rifing fun ; When peeps the rofy morn, the trembling ipright

Flies from the fun-shine, and avoids the light.

Let Atheists tell, how first this matter came -In beauteous order, and a god-like frame; How heaps inertial fteer'd a course so wise. And mark'd and fix'd the diffricts of the fkies; Why Saturn feiz'd at first his cold abode, | Nor can approach more near the burning god; How was it first debated, then agreed, That Sun the rest so vastly should exceed; A chaos once, 'till Heaven's despotic Lord In power and wisdom gave the forming word, No stars enamell'd shot a twinkling light, Nor azure concave grew upon the fight; Earth, fea, and fkies, in mix'd confusion lay, .. No fun as yet reveal'd the radiant day; Unmov'd, unform'd, remain'd th' unwieldy god¶, Clay without motion, and a dufky clod; Nature herfelf appear'd without a face, Nature heriest appear u within the fenfeles bulk, he Till thro' the void, the fenfeless bulk, hurl'd

Wisdom to guide, and power to move the By deftin'd laws, the mingled maffes fly At his command, and clear the gloomy iky.

But what more largely shews the work divine.

Of human structure, that admir'd machine, O'er all the frame the generous juices flow Bid in the womb the hard'ning embryo grow;

It is demonstrated that the orbits of planets are eclipses; and that the comets move in eclipses very eccentric, approaching nearly to Parabolas." Newt. Whift. &c.

It is found by aftronomers that Saturn is at fo great a distance from the Sun, as to be almost 30 years in going round him.

Before the Almighty had impressed that particular kind of motion upon the Sun which confliruted its light. .....

A foul

A foul czlestial to the lump he joins,
And his own image in the fabric shines.
What ages past can his existence bound,
Or where set borders to the vast profound?
I'm lost—I'm lost—no period can I find,
No time to terminate th' Almighty mind.—
It must be so;—Eternity's allow d;—
Eternal Gop! resound the joyful croud.
What headstrong mortal, impotent of mind,
Shall mock eternal power and wisdom join'd?
Thro' boundless space the monster shall be driv'n,

Like fabled giants, by the wrath of heav'n.

If all the hoft celeftial dare engage
The King of Heav'n, unequal war they wage:
For God ETERNAL can on none depend,
Or need affiftance from a foreign friend:
Self-happy rules; unlimited his fway;
All ranks of beings his behefts obey.

EUSEBIUS.

*

O D E

On the Pleasure arising from VICISSITUDE. Left unfinished by Mr. GRAY. With Additions (in Italics) by Mr. MASON.

Now the golden morn aloft
Waves her dew-bespangled wing;
With vermil cheek, and whisper soft,
She wooes the tardy spring:
Till-April starts, and calls around
The sleeping fragrance from the ground,
And lightly o'er the living scene
Scatters her freshest, tenderest green.

New-born flocks, in ruftic dance, Frifking ply their feeble feet; Forgetful of their wintry trance,

The birds his prefence greet:
But chief, the sky-lark warbles high
His trembling thrilling extacy;
And, lessening from the dazzling fight,
Melts into air and liquid light.

Rife my foul! on wings of fire, Rife the rapt rous choir among; Hark! 'tis Nature firikes the lyre, And leads the general fong, Warm let the lyric transport flow,

Warm, as the ray that bids it glow,
Warm, as the ray that bids it glow,
And animates the wernal grove,
With health, with harmony, and love.
Yesterday the fullen year

Saw the fnowy whirlwind fly;
Mute was the mufic of the air,
The herd flood drooping by:
Their raptures now that wildly flow,
No yesterday nor morrow know;
'Tis man alone that joy descries

With forward and reverted eyes.

Smiles on past Missfortune's brow,
Soft Reflection's hand can trace,
And o'er the cheek of forrow throw

A melancholy grace;
While Hope prolongs our happier hour,
Or deepeft shades, that dimly lour,
And blacken round our weary way,
Gild with a gleam of distant day,

Still, where rofy Pleafure leads,
See a kindred Grief purfue;
Behind the steps that Milery treads Approaching Comfort view:
The hues of biffs more brightly glow,
Chastis'd by fabler tints of woe,
And blended form, with artful strife,
The strength and harmony of life.

See the wretch, that long has tost On the thorny bed of pain, At length repair his vigour lost.

And breathe, and walk again: The meanest flowret of the vale, The simplest note that swells the gale, The common sun, the air, the skies, To Him are opening Paradise.

Humble Quiet builds her cell, Near the fource where Pleafure flows; She eyes the clear chrystalline well,

And tastes it as it goes.
While, far below, the madding crowd
Rush headlong to the dangerous flood,
Where broad and turbulent it sweeps,
And perish in the boundless deeps.

Mark where Indolence and Pride, Sooth'd by Plattery's tinkling found, Go, foftly rolling, fide by fide,

Their dull, but daily round:
To these, if Hebe's fif should bring
The purest cup from Pleasure's spring,
Say, can they taste the slavour high,
Of sober, simple, genuine Joy?

Mark Ambition's march fublime,
Up to Power's meridian height;
While pale-ey'd Envy feet him climb,
And fickens at the fight.
Phantoms of Danger, Death and Dread, Float hourly round Ambition's head;
While Spleen, within his rival's breaft,

Sits brooding on her scorpion nest.

Happier he, the peasant, far,
From the panys of Passion free,
That breathes the keen but wholesome air,

Of rugged penury.

He, when his morning tak is done,
Can slumber in the noon-tide sun;
And hie him home, at evening's clos,
To seweet repast, and caim repose.

He, unconficious whence the blifs, Feels, and owns, in carols rude, That all the circling joys are his, Of dear Vicissitude.

of dear resignate.
From toil he wins his spirits light,
From busy day, the peaceful night;
Rich, from the very want of Wealth,
In Heaven's best treasures, Peace and Health.

The FLATTERER.

From Imitations of the Characters of Theophrafius.
THE Flatt'rer is a nurse, to wait on,

THE Flatt'rer is a nurse, to want on,
And feed with pap, his baby great one,
And footh the froward pouting thing
With 'that's a dear,' and 'There's a king.'

Ther But, Was And Such For ! A ki Thu: Show Or t

177

He'll

How

In tr

He p Shou It pr But, It sh The Wo' But Prais

Wit

Befo

As v
The
And
And To t He'l
Stan
A pl

He

His

And

And And Cau Tis The For, A po But So n

Soon A vi Off His And The If h He's

To Defo A v. He i Tha Of f He On

Dev The His His To He'll fmirk upon his Lord, and cry, How you arrest the public eye! In truth, whene'er you come in view, There's no one look'd upon but you: But, à-propos, the club last night Was vastly num'rous and polite; And there you had fuch honour paid, Such justice done, I should have faid; For you, they all declar'd, might claim A kind of full exclusive fame. Thus prating, if a straggling mote Should trespass on his lordship's coat, Or thread should feem inclin'd to stray, He picks it cringingly away. Should a grey hair perchance arife, It proves my lord extremely wife; But, if his poll quite black appears, It flows great vigour at his years, The flatt'rer, 'till his patron's heard, Wo'n't suffer you to speak a word; But all the while, before his face, Praises his manner, tone, and grace; And then chimes in at ev'ry close With-What amazing thoughts are those ! Before his patron has well fpoken As vile a jest as could be broken, The fycophant begins to ftare, And strains, and wriggles in his chair, And bites his handkerchief in half To stiffe the pretended laugh. He'll strut before his lord, and bawl, Stand back there, fellows! from the wall: A plague upon ye, and a new rope! You croud the greatest man in Europe, He carries to his patron's fons His pockets fluff'd with macaroons; And in his presence he'll cares 'em, And kifs, and dandle 'em, and blefs 'em, And fwear he doats on them the rather 'Caufe they're fo vaftly like their father ! 'Tis plain the flatt'rer must have got The length too of his patron's foot; For, should his lordship but try on A pair of pumps, 'tis ten to one But he protefts, he never knew So neat a foot done justice to ! Soon as he learns my lord intends A vifit to fome neighb'ring friends, Off flarts the flatt'rer to announce His coming, and runs back at once, And fays, I have propounded to 'em The honour you vouchsafe to do 'em. If he would court fome patronefs, He's quite a connoisseur in dress, And skips and dances up and down To half the ma'moifelles in town; Descants on all that women wear-A very band-box chevalier. He no where more completely fhines Than when he with his lordship dines : Of finiles and praifes how profuse! He fips and fmacks the rofy juice; On ev'ry dish in rapture dwells, Develops how each fauce excells; Then turns, and wishes he could see His lordship eat more heartily. His lordship's footman he outskips To reach a cushion for his hips :

3

rastus.

t one,

ing.

Hell

Then fits him down politely near, And hangs in whifpers on his ear; Nor deigns the company a word, But what's in def rence to my lord. Viewing some house, he reads a lecture On its majestic architecture! Remarks with exquisite delight That it's a most enchanting fite; The park too is immenfely pleafant; That is, if their possessor's present: Nay, he can even raife his battery On base of other people's flattery, And, though they dedicate like STEELE, They don't do justice by a deal: And portraits, flatt'ring out of reason, Strike him the moment that he fees one! In fhort, he's like a fawning hound, That barks, and jumps, and capers round, And lets you play with him, or kick, In hopes to get a bone to pick.

In this fair Vill, which fuits retirement well,
The Muse shall visit, and the Naiad dwell;
No murmur shall invade the nymph's repose,
But her own Avon's which beneath thee flows;
No ruder sound affect amusement's ease
Than the soft whisper of the vernal breeze;
By Phebus sent, his fav'rite bards are come,
Act his beheft, and consecrate the dome.

On a FIGURE

Painted within the Cellege at Winchester.

(From the LATIN.)

WOULD'ST thou an useful servant see?
then view
This figur'd emblem with attention due,
Behold him, with projected snout of swine,
On whatsever food content to dine:
Thus lock'd his lips, and ever closely press'd,
Secure the secret in his faithful breast.
His ears are assine, erect and wide,
With patience list ning, should his master chide:

Observe him sooted, like the stag, below,
As speedy to return as quick to go:
His left hand, leaden, to his toil is just,
His open right speaks honesty and trust;
His habit, neatness; and the sword he wears,
And shield, which poiz'd upon his arm he bears,

Proclaim him ready, on the leaft alarm, To guard his mafter and himself from harm.

Composed in a Gentleman's Garden, in June laste and now addressed to a young Lady.

THO' the country now difclofes Charming beds of blufning rofes; Lilies, pinks of various hue, Honcyfuckles, wilets blue; Fine carnations at my feet, Fill the air with odour fweet; Tho' the hazel copfe and grove Echo with the fongs of love: Tho' the linnet and the thrush Carol from a neighb'ring bush, Yet they can't extort the dart, Nancy levell'd at my heart.

Tho' in Eden's bow'r I stand, Viewing far the cultur'd land; Scenes divertify'd and new, Ever op'ning to my view: Pastures fair extending wide, Where the river rolls its tide. See the verdant vested plains, Laughing nymphs, and happy fwains; Here a house, and there a mill, Here a flock, and there a rill; None of thefe, alas! can pleafe-Nancy has deftroy'd my eafe.

Bless'd with her, e'en Lapland, drear, Would a paradife appear; When the's abfent, Arcady Is a defart unto me-Come then, my fair, my fuit approve, Hear my tender tale of love : Look with pity on my youth, Hear the artless voice of truth; Smile propitious, then shall I Be the happiest 'neath the sky !-All I wish, and all I fancy, Can alone be found in Nancy,

*****

MADRIGAL : Imitated from the Spanish by DAVID GARRICK, Efq.

OR me my fair a wreath hath wove, Where rival flow'rs in union meet; As oft the kifs'd this gift of love, Her breath gave sweetness to the sweet,

A bee, within a damask rose, Had crept, the nectar'd dew to fip; But leffer tweets the thief foregoes, And fixes on Maria's lip.

There, tafting all the bloom of fpring, Wak'd by the rip'ning breath of May, The ungrateful spoiler left his sting, And with the honey fled away.

> R A C

Written at Bath, by DAVID GARRICK, Efq.

TE Beaux Esprits, say, what is GRACE; Dwells it in motion, shape, or face? Or is it all the three combin'd, Guided and foften'd by the mind? Where it is not, all eyes may fee; But where it is,-all hearts agree: 'Tis there, when eafy in its state, The mind is elegantly great; Where looks give speech to every feature, The sweetest eloquence of nature; A harmony of thought and motion, To which at once we pay devotion. -But where to find this nonpareil! Where does this female wonder dwell,

Who can at will our hearts command? - Behold in public-CUMEERLAND*!

* The affability and general department of her R. Highness render the compliment a deserved one. ***********

The SERMON without END. Imstated from the French of Monf. De la Condamine, Prieft, whom good lungs never left in the lurch, [the church, But whose breath gave a lethargy thorough Would preach all his people asseep & awake, Confounded their fenfes, nor made them to quake ;

Yet his fermons for years had been fo long and loud, [him conclude. That no creature could fay, they e'er heard It was Lent, and the people were very tharp in a pet,

So they rifk'd their poor fouls, and left church The fexton he ftay'd-he'd no cause to repine: He cheer'd up his foul with the bread and the wine:

And then brought the keys-left the priest in the lurch; The church, Saying, when you have done, father-lock up -4-4-4-4-4-4>->->->->->-

Agather TRANSLATION.

Certain old preacher, by nature longwinded, So tired his flock, and fo little they minded, That all by confent went to fleep: Awaking, they found he was still going on, Without having finish'd the first head of his plan, They out of the church by turns creep. The fexton remains, tho' impatient & thirfly,

Yet confoling himfelf with fome wine and bread musty, That by good hap in a corner he found: Then reaching the keys, he gives them the prieft. Tthe reft, Saying, Sir, I must go: when you've finish'd Pray fasten the door fafe and found.

*** EPIGRAMS.

On the LADIES wearing of FEATHERS.

THEN LEDA, the lovely, grew weary of man, And PASIPHAR broke her ftrong tether; The last lik'd a bull, and the first lov'd a swan,

But, 'twas all for the fake of the Feather. On a bad Servant, but a good Nurfe.

SAYS Dick to his friend-I'd turn Mary She hath not a quality worthy her pay : No, fays he, I will not-I fha'n't get fuch another, For the constantly nurs'd both my father and " That's my view to discharge her-would you keep your breath—

As she nurs'd both your father and mother to death,"

F lait lefthe mac

17

XX

ficia than cafe nifie P grea fione and tine

> ed.peaf rode mor calle

> > to a

the !

of th

tile,

Free miu and imn

as t ing they tin wer was they five farn

pro wal fam cott whi two Alf Ger

wal chir the bein tha NE.

of her

444 om the

eft in urch.

rough wake.

em to long clude.

heard

fharp

a pet.

hurch

epine;

d and priest hurch.

ock up

long-

inded,

no se

of his eep.

thirfty,

ound:

en the

he reft, finish'd

****

1.

S.

ERS.

v weary tether;

a fwan,

Feather.

n Mary

et fuch mother,

ther and

-would mother

ay:

FOREIGN and DOMESTIC OCCURRENCES.

FORE! GN AFFAIRS. NAPLES, April 4.

A N epidemical diftemper has carried off many people in this capital within this last fortnight, and still continues, but with les violence. The distemper is a sever of the putrid kind, affecting the head and ftomach and, although it is catching, the phyficians do not look upon it to be more fo than fevers of that fort generally are, In some cases, Dr. James's Pocoders have been adminifiered, and have proved efficacious .- Gaz.

Paris, May 5. The want of corn is fo great all over this kingdom, as to have occafioned a general mutiny at Tours and Dijon, and even in Paris. The bakers shops and the markets have been pillaged; and the mutineers became at length fo tormidable, that the military force was called forth, and 120 of them were taken, and lodged in the Baftile, who will, no doubt, be feverely punished,-During the rifing at Paris and Verfailles, the Count d'Artois, in order to appeafe the populace, mounted his horse and rode among the people, throwing money amongit them, but it had no effect, for he was called to on all fides, " We do not want money, but bread."

The King has iffued an edict, allowing to all veffels, as well French as Foreigners, that that arrive with foreign corn in any French ports, before the 1ft of August, a premium of 18 fols for every quintal of wheat and 12 fols for every quintal of rye to be immediately paid by the King's officers.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Lestwithiel, in Cornwall, May 3 Last night as three journeymen carpenters were returning from Killington, near this place, where they had been at work, they all fell into a tin mine, eight fathom deep, fix of which were under water: By this accident (which was occasioned by the darkness of the night) they were all drowned.

Bury, May 19. Wednesday morning, about five o'clock, a fire broke out at a new-erected farm-house situated on Culford-Heath, (the property of the Right Hon, the Earl of Cornwallis) which in a short time consumed the fame; the flames were fo rapid that two cottages (newly-erected) were confumed, by which the poor cottagers loft their all, and two children were with much difficulty faved. Alfo this morning the church of Fornham St. Genoveve, was burnt down, except the bare wall. The former was occasioned by the chimney eatching fire and communicating to the thatch; the latter, by means of a gunbeing fired ar some jack-daws which had lodged on the steeple; the wad lodging in the thatch, the church caught fire, and was foon confumed; one of the bells broke in falling.

MISCEL. VOL. III.

LONDON. April 23.

The Europa East-Indiaman, Capt. Pelly, is fafe arrived from Bombay.

Comparat we wire of the maritime forces of England, France, and Spain :- France and pain have fit for immediate fervice, 146 full of the line - England has fit for immediate fervice. 93. -- Majority In favour of France and

Spain, 53. 29. The feveral perfors apprehended for the riot and rescue in Moor-fiel s, (see p 131) were tried at Hicks's-hall, when some were fentenced to be imprifoned in Newgate 3 yrs. others 5, and themost notorious for

May 2. This day the fessions ended at the Old Bailey, at which the following prifeners were capitally convicted, viz. Daniel Gregory and Wm. Barrett, for a highway robbery on Hounflow-heath; Thomas Palmes, Michael Conway, and Thomas M'Donald, for burglary; Thomas Wood, for stealing cartle on Epping-forest; Henry Jordan, Frederick Williams, John Hines, and Tho. Tunks, for house breaking; Samuel Storer and Samuel Crofs, for breaking open a butcher's thop, and fealing meat; John Toppins, for horse-stealing; and Richard Walthall, for dealing from Mr. Chr. Alderson, to whom he was clerk, two warrants, one for 213l. the other for 1561. 4s. for which he had received the money.

At this feffions, Thomas Bates, late a ferjeant in the 2d regiment of guards, was tried for the murder of his wife, and found guilty of munflaughter only. He bore a very good character, she a very bad one, which, no doubt, had great weight with the jury, as one witness swore positively that he had threatened to butcher her.

2. Mark-Lane. There is now the greatest quantity of foreign corn in the port of Londen ever known at one time, which, with the warmness of the weather, occasions an excessive duliness in the trade in general. On Monday 53 and 54s. were given for fome exceeding fine famples of I ffex, but at the close of the market 52s. was reckoned a top price, and to-day question whether any would have fetched that money. In middling famples there is fill a greater diff rence, the mealmen buying the finest American full 4s. per quarter cheaper than last week. Barley is also lower, great quantities fold from 26 to 23, and must be exceeding fine to exceed 258 per quarter. Beans nearly as they were, but oats declining.

5. A duel was lately fought between Lieut. Reynoids and Lieut. Ruxton, at Limerick, in Ireland, at eight in the evening, when the former was that in the belly, and died forme hours after. Before he died, he fent for Mr. Ruxton, acknowledged himfeif to binne before witnesses, was very forry for what had happened.

nies

ties

ed !

ieft.

and

gov ceec

plea

1 cula

con

it in ther

thei

beer

vide

quo

whe

and tiers

of g ther

and fubi

ffres jarri pofe

cert

like inde

peac

ties.

tion

pref

troo

have exce

plain gene nary

mat

to th

the

But

have inter

conc offer

dent

(the men

the .

femi

ten

with ing ;

vine

fine

the !

defa

feize

wei

Gen

A

happened, pulled a ring off his finger, and requested Lieut. Ruxton to wear it as a token of remembrance. The coroner's inquest brought in their verdict in favour of Mr. Ruxton, manslaughter in his own defence.

12. His Grace the Duke of Chandos was fworn of his Majefly's Privy Council.

The Court of King's-Bench proceeded to state the Judges report, in order to pronounce judgment in the case of Macklin against Lee, James, Aldus, Miles, and Clarke; but after the Court had referred the whole matter to the mafter, to oblige the offenders to make Macklin a reasonable compensation in damages for two years falary at 400l, each, two benefits at 2001, each, and the whole of his expences out of pecket, Macklin generously relinquished the whole of his damages, upon the defendants taking 2001. worth of tickets; that is to fay, 100l, for his daughter's benefit, 100l, for his own, and paying sool, to the proprietors of Covent-garden theatre for the lofs they fullained when the riot happened. It is worthy of observation, that the defendants must have been ruined if matters had been pushed to extremities. All the defendants were prefent but Miles.

A furprizing large oak tree was lately felled on Windfor-foreft, which fold for regl.

The following was taken from a shewboard in a country village in Yorkshire:— Wrighten and readen and trew spellin and allso marchants acknuts withe dowble enterey taut hear, N.B. Girlls and bonys boarded and good youzitch for children.

The Virginians are the most resolute in their opposition to the Parliamentary authority of this kingdom over her Colonies. They have not only taxed themselves to support an army, but have even raised that army, and appointed a general to command; who, it is thought, will command the general army of the provinces, should matters come to extremity.

15. Mr. Burke prefented to the House of Commons a representation and remonstrance from the General Assembly of New-York, which, after a warm debate, in which Mr. Cruger, Member for Brittol, distinguished himself, was rejected:—In this remonstrance the Americans recapitulate the grievances they labour under from several acts of the British legislature, and conclude their claims of redress in the following manner:—

"We claim but a reftoration of those rights which we enjoyed, by general consent, before the close of the last war; we desire no more than a continuation of that antient government to which we are entitled by the principles of the British constitution, and by which can alone be secured to us the rights of Englishmen. Attached by every tie of interest and regard to the British nation, and accustomed to behold with reverence and respect its excellent form of government, we harbour not an idea of diminishing the power and grandeur of the mother-country, or less-fening the luftre and dignity of parliament; our object is the happinets which, we are convinced, can only artie from the union of both countries. To render this union permanent and foird, we efteem it the undoubted right of the colonies to participate of that conflictation whose direct end and aim is the liberty of the fubject; fully trufting that this Honourable House will liften with attention to our complaints, and reduces our giveances, by adopting fuch measures as shall be found most conducive to the general welfare of the whole empire, and most likely to reftere union and harmony among all its different branches.

" By order of the General Affembly,

JOHN CRUGER, Speaker." The above remonstrance was transmitted to Bristol by the Charming Peggy, which failed from New-York the 27th of March, and arrived at Brittol on the 2d of May. She brought, befides the above, a firm, dutiful, and loyal perition to the King, and a memerial to the Lords, neither of which have been attended with the wished-for success. notwithstanding the ministry had purposely given an opening to the General Affembly of New-York to shew their moderation by acquiefcing in the terms of the conciliating clause proposed by Lord North. From the favourable disposition of the above Assembly in disclaiming the authority of the proceedings of the Continental Congress, hopes were entertained that the whole province was ready to fubmit, and that the acts of the British parliament would be acknowledged as binding, by those who had rejected the resolutions of the Congress as of no force; but in this Government appear to have been mista-The Affembly feem to be of opinion, that the acts of both are alike unconstitutional; and the fense of the people, if it may be collected from their late proceedings, is wholly in favour of the congressional side: for, notwithstanding the vote of their reprefentatives, by the latest accounts received from thence, they were again proceeding to chuse delegates to represent the province in the Congress that was to meet on the 10th instant; nor has the following circular letter, directed to the feveral Governors, by the Secretary of State for the American department, had the least effect to influence their conduct on that occasion:

"SIR, Whitehall, Jan. 4, 1775.
"Certain perfons ftiling themselves Delegates of his Majefty's colonies in America, having prefumed, without his Majefty's authority or consent, to assemble together at Philadelphia, in the months of September & October last; and having thought fit, among other unwarrantable proceedings, to resolve that it will be necessary, that another congress should be held in the same place on the 10th of May next, unless redress for certain pretended grievances be obtained before that time, and to recommend that all the color

nies

E, nt :

are

n of per-ibt-

that

the

this

tion

an-

1 be fare

re-

dif.

r," icted hich

arch,

She

tiful,

me-

have cefs,

ofely

by of

y ac-

ating

1 the mbly

ceed-

were rea-

ritish

bindfolu-

ut in nista-

nion,

tutio-

may gs, is fide:

repre-

ceived

ing to nce in roth

letter,

he Se-

epart-

their 1775.

Dele-nerica,

's au-

her at ber &

mong

refolve

con-

on the certain

re that colonies in North-America should choose deputies to attend such congress; I am commanded by the King, to fignify to you his Majesty's pleasure, That you do use your utmost endeavours to prevent any fuch appointment of deputies within the colony under your government; and that you do exhort all perfons to defift from fuch unwarrantable proceeding, which cannot but be highly difpleasing to the King. I am, Sir, &c. DARTMOUTH."

Though this letter appears manifeftly calculated to defeat the meeting of the intended congress, yet, as no regard has been paid to it in chufing delegates, it is much doubted whether it will have any effect in preventing their affembling. No means, however, have been left untried to excite jealousies to divide them. The disputes formerly about the quotas which every colony should furnish, when the common enemy were butchering and scalping the inhabitants on their frontiers, have been called to mind by the friends of government, to shew what little reliance there is on a thorough union of the colonies, and how much more eligible it would be to fubmit to parliament, than to depend on the thrength of an opposition, which, from the jarring interests of the members that compose it, can never be expected to act in concert. These, with many arguments of the like kind, have been occasionally urged, to induce the colonies separately to make their peace, before things are brought to extremities; but hitherto the people have flood firm. At Boston, as Gen. Gage, by his modera-tion and prudent conduct, has been able to preserve the strictest discipline among his troops, so the civil magistrates, on their part, have been equally vigilant in restraining the excesses of the common people. The complaints that have been justly sounded have in general been redreffed, and, except the ordinary irregularities occasioned by liquor, no material injury has been done by the foldiers to the inhabitants, nor by the inhabitants to the foldiers, except by refusing them supplies. But this pacific temper will probably foon have an end. When the fuccours arrive, the intentions of government cannot be long concealed. Some infults have already been offered, which the injured parties have prudently overlooked. On the 16th of March, (the day the provincial congress had recommended for fafting and prayer) a party of the 4th regiment, when the people were affembling, pitched two markee tents within ten yards of their place of worship, and, with three drums and three fifes, kept beating and playing during the whole time of divine fervice. On the 17th, Col. Hancock's fine feat near the Common was mal-treated, the fences broken down, and the enclosures defaced; and, on the 18th, the Neck-guard feized 13,425 musket-cartridges, with 3000lb. weight of ball, private property, which the General refused to restore on the application of the owner. These are the preludes, per-haps, to hostilities of a more serious nature, which will lead to the discovery of the intentions of the ministry, by transporting to America fo formidable a force.

St. James's, May 17. Advice has been re-ceived of the fafe arrival of the Anson, with the Judges on board, at Fort St. George on the 20th of September laft, and the Ashburnham with General Glavering, Col. Monfon, and Mr. Francis, on the 21st, and that they failed together on the 24th of the fame month for Bengal.

13. One of his Majesty's electoral messengers arrived from Hanover, with the melancholy account, that her Majesty Carolina Matilda, Queen of Denmark and Norway, died at Zell on the 10th instant, about midnight, of a malignant fever, after an illness of five days, to the great grief of their Majesties and all the royal family. - She was born July 22, 1751, and married at St. James's, Oct. 1, 1766, by proxy, to Christian VII. King of Denmark,-On this news being made public, the Lord Chamberlain iffued orders for the Court's going into mourning on Wednefday the 24th inflant, viz. The ladies to wear black filk, plain muslin or long lawn, crape or love hoods, black filk shoes, black glazed gloves, and black paper fans. Undress, black or dark grey unwatered tabbies .- The men to wear black cloth, without buttons on the fleeves or pockets, plain muslin or long lawn cravats and weepers, black fwords & buckles. Undress, dark grey frocks. The officers of the army, fleet, and marines, to wear a black crape round their left arms, with their uniforms .- The Earl Marihal also gave notice, that it was expedied, that all perfons do put themselves into decent mourning.

20. Sir Beaumont Hotham, and In. Heath, Efq; of the Inner Temple, were called to the degree of Serjeants at Law; and Sir Beaumont was also sworn into the office of a Baron of the Court of Exchequer.

23. Mr. Lee was declared duly elected Alderman of Aldgate ward, in the room of Wm.

Shakespeare, Esq; deceased.

24. The Duchess of Kingston (who arrived on the 20th inft, from Italy) appeared in the court of King's-Bench, to answer to an indictment preferred against her for marrying the late Duke, her former husband being then alive, where her Grace entered into a recognifance, herfelf in 4000l, and her four furcties-(the D. of Newcastle, Ld. Mountflewart, Mr. Laroche, and Sir Tho. Clarges) in 1000l, each, that the thall appear to anfwer the faid indictment, whenever called upon by the King and her Peers in parliament ailembled.

28. About eight o'clock in the evening a duel was fought in Hyde-park, between Col. R-, and Mr. G-, when Mr. G-, who was to fire first, fired and miffed his antagonist, then Col. R-fired, and shot Mr. Gin the middle of his thigh; but Mr. G-in-

M m 2

have

rious dictat

shed I town

town

behay

fince

The fo

Kı

nas P

ringto

John

man,

Meili

fon W

and h

Miles

of B

Mr.

Porti

born

Barb

faac (

Hick

of M

Flint

ley,

Cook

wick

ley P

of S

Tide

Nath

Mur

broo

Hen

Lane

Jaco

of A mot

nam

Mr.

M

Seth

killer.

ener

one

pear

rine

ed:

gim

of t

A

lars ftan

gre

0

Th

fifting on discharging the contents of the second pistol, through the affistance of a chair, (not being able to stand) fired again, and lodged the contents in Col. R—'s knee-pan; the Colonel, still being desirous of siring again, would, had it not been through the persuasion of Messrs. H. and T. who told him what danger he was in: the Colonel declining, the matter ended.

clining, the matter ended.

31. This morning died George Augustus Rochford, Esg, of the wound he received in the above duel with Mr. G.

Upwards of 100 pieces of cannon, of a new confiruction, to light as to be carried by a man on horfeback, and which carry balls from 4 to 7 pounds weight, and 10,000 fland of arms, were shipped from the Tower in the course of the present month, for the use of the troops in America.

NEWS from AMERICA.

From the Essex CARETTE, printed at Salem, in New England, April 25.

Wednesday the 19th of April, the troops of his Britarnic Majesty commenced hostilities upon the people of this province. The particulars relative to this intere ing event, by which we are involved in all the horrors of a civil war, we have endeavoured to collect as well as the present consused state of affairs will permit, On Tuefday evening a detachment from the army, confifting, it is faid, of 8 or goo men, commanded by Lieut. Col. Smith, embarked at the bottom of the common in Bofton, on board a number of boats, and landed a little way up Charles river, from whence they proceeded with filence and expedition on their way to Concord, about 18 miles from Bofton. The people were foon alarmed, and began to affem le in feveral towns before day-light, in order to watch the motion of the troops. At Lexington, fix miles from Concord, a company of militia, of about Too men, mustered near the meeting-house; the troops came in fight of them just before fun-rife; and running within a few rods of them, the commanding officer accosted the militia in these words: "Disperse, you Re-" bels-Damn you, throw down your arms, "and difperfe:" Upon which the troops huzzaed, and immediately one or two officers discharged their pistols, which were instantaneously followed by the firing of four or five of the foldiers, and then there feemed to be a general discharge from the whole body. Eight of our men were killed, and 9 wounded. In a few minutes after this action, the enemy renewed their march for Concord, at which place they destroyed several carriages, carriage wheels, and about 20 barrels of flour. all belonging to the province. Here about 150 men going to a bridge, of which the enemy were in poffession, the latter fired, and killed two of our men, who then returned the fire, and obliged the enemy to retreat back to Lexington, where they met Lord

Percy, with a large reinforcement, and two pieces of cannon.

The enemy now having a body of near 1800 men, made a halt, picked up many of their dead, and took care of their wounded, At I enotomy, a few of our men attacked a party of 12 of the enemy, (carrying flores and provisions to the troops) killed one of them, wounded feveral, and made the rest rifoners, and took poffession of all their arms, stores, and provisions, without any lois on our tide. The enemy having halted one or two hours at Lexington, found it necesfary to make a fecond retreat, carrying with them many of their dead and wounded whom they put into chaifes and on horfes that they found flanding in the road. They continued heir retreat from Lexington to Charles-town with great precipitation; and notwithstanding their field pieces, our people continued the pursuit, firing at them till they got to Charles-town neck, which they reached a little after fun-fet, over which the enemy paffed, proceeded up Bunker's hill, and foon afterwards went into the town, under the protection of the Somerfet man of war of 64 guns.

In Lexington the enemy fet fire to Deacon Loring's house and barn, Mrs. Mulliken's house and shop, and Joshua Bond's house and thop, which were all confumed. They also fet fire to feveral other houses, but our peo-nic extinguished the flames. They piliaged almost every house they passed by, breaking and destroying doors, windows, glasses, &c. and carrying off cleathing and other valuable effects. It appeared to be their defign to burn and destroy all before them; and nothing but our vigorous purfuit prevented their purposes from being put in execution. But the favage barbarity exercifed upon the hodies of our unfortunate brethren who fell, is almost incredible; not content with shooting the unarmed, aged and infirm, they difregarded the cries of the wounded, killing their without mercy, and mangling their bodies in a most shocking manner.*

We have the pleasure to say, that notwith-standing the highest provocation given by the enemy, not one instance of cruelty, that we

* A private letter from Salem thus accounts for the cruelty which the Salem Gazette writer here lays to the charge of the British troops:

&quot;General Cage fent, on the 18th, a detachment to Concord, to render uselessome cannon the Rebels were in possession of.—After effecting the business they were fenton, in returning back, the rebels, who durft not face the regulars, fired on them out of windows as they passed, which so irritated the King's troops, that they fired and burntevery place that harboured such cowardly miscreants; and had not their officers restrained their sury, more mischief would have ensued."

E,

twe

800 heir

At

ed a ores

e of rest

heir

lois

one ecef.

with

hom

they nued

own

and-nueri

ot la

ed a nemy

foon the

ar of acon

ken's

e and alfo

peolaged

aking

, &c.

uable

gn to ented

ition.

n the o fell,

hoot-

y dif-

illing

ir bo-

with-

by the

at we have

is ac-n Ca-

of the a des fome

of .-

nton,

ft not win-

ed the

int ey mif-rained

fued."

have heard of, was committed by our victo. rious militia; but, listening to the merciful dichates of the christian religion, they " breashed higher fentiments of humanity.

The conflernation of the people of Charlestown, when our enemies were entering the town, is inexpreffible; the troops however behaved tolerably civil, and the people have fince nearly ail left the town.

The following is the lift of the Provincials who were killed and wounded.

KILLED. Meffrs. Robert Monroe,* Jonas Parker, * Samuel Hadley, * Jonathan Har-rington, * Caleb Harrington, * Ifaac Muzzy, * John Brown, John Raymond Nath. Wyman, and Jedidiah Munroe, of Lexington. Meifrs, Jason Ruffell, Jabez Wyman, and Jafon Winship, of Menotomy. Deacon Haynes, and Mr. Reed, of Sudbury. Captain James Miles, of Concord. Capt. Jonathan Wilson, of Bedford. Capt. Davis, Mr. Horfmer, and Mr. James Howard, of Acton. Mr. Azael Porter,* and Mr. Daniel Thompson, of Wo-born. Mr. James Miller, and Capt. Wm. Barber's son, aged 14, of Charles-town. Ifaac Gardner, Efq; of Brookline. Mr. John Hickes, of Cambridge. Mr. Henry Putnam, of Medford. Meff. Abednego Ramfdel, W. Flint, Daniel Townsend, and Thomas Hadley, of Lynn. Meffrs. Henry Jacobs, Sam. Cook, Ebenezer Goldthwait, Geo. Southwick, Benj. Doland, Jotham Webb, and Perley Putnam, of Danvers. Mr. Benj. Peirce, of Salem.

WOUNDED. Meff. John Robbins, John Tidd, Solomon Pierce, Thomas Winship, Nathaniel Farmer, Joseph Commer, Ebenezer Munroe, Francis Brown, and Prince Easter-brooks, (a negro man) of Lexington. Mr. Hemmenway, of Framingham. Mr. John Lane, of Bedford. Mr. Geo. Reed, and Mr. Jacob Bacon, of Woburn. Mr. Wm. Polly, of Medford. Mr. Joshua Felt, and Mr. Timothy Munroe, of Lynn. Mr. Nathan Putnam, and Mr. Dennis Wallis, of Danvers. Mr. Nathaniel Cleves, of Beverly.

Missing. Mr. Samuel Froft, and Mr. Seth Ruffel, of Menotomy.

[Those distinguished with this mark (*) were killed by the first fire of the enemy.]

We have feen an account of the lofs of the enemy, faid to have come from an officer of one of the men of war; by which it appeared that 63 of the regulars, and 49 marines were killed, and 103 of both wounded: In all 215. Lieut. Gould of the 4th regiment, who is wounded, and Lieut. Potter of the marines, and about 12 foldiers, are prisoners.

Mr. James Howard, and one of the regulars, discharged their pieces at the same inftant, and each killed the other.

Our late brethren of Danvers, who fell fighting for their country, were interred with great folemnity and respect on Friday last.

The public most fincerely sympathize with the friends and relations of our deceafed brethren, who gloriously facrificed their lives in fighting for the liberties of their country .--By their noble intrepid conduct, they have endeared their memories to the prefent generation, who will transmit their names to posterity with the highest honour.

The following is the fubitance of the account of the before-mentioned affair, which is handed about at Lloyd's and Garraway's coffee-houses:

" General Gage having heard that the infurgents were drawing some cannon a few miles from Boston, he dispatched an officer with some troops, to demand them to be delivered up, which the infurgents retufed to comply with .- A fecond meifage was fent, when the officer informed them, that he must obey his orders, which were, in case of a refufal to furrender them, that he must fire on those that surrounded them, but which he hoped they would prevent, by immediately relinquishing them. This they absolutely refused to do t on which the troops fired on them, and killed about fixty. On this the country arofe, and affilted the infurgents to load the cannon, and they directly fired upon General Gage's troops, which did great execution, near 100 being killed and 60 wounded. The noise of the cannon alarmed Gen. Gage, who immediately fent Lord Percy. with a larger party of troops, to enquire into the matter. When his Lordship came to the place, he heard the officers' account of the dispute, and then returned back with the troops to Ceneral Gage's intrenchments, as he did not find any authority he had to proceed further in it.'

In Provincial Congress, Wartertown, April 26. To the Inhabitants of Great-Britain,

" Friends and Fellow-Subjects.

" HOSTILITIES are at length commenced in this colony, by the troops under command of General Cage; and it being of the greatest importance that an early, true, and authentic account of this i human proceeding should be known to you, the Congress of this Colony have transmitted the same; and from want of a fession of the Hon, Continental Congress, think it proper to address you on this alarming occasion.

By the clearest depositions, relative to this transaction, it will appear, that on the night preceding the 19th of April instant, a body of the King's troops, under command of Col. Smith, were fecretly landed at Cambridge, with an apparent defign to take or destroy the military and other stores provided for the defence of this colony, and depofited at Concord; that some inhabitants of the colony, on the night aforefaid, whilft travelling peaceably on the road between Boston and Concord, were feized and greatly abused by armed men, who appeared to be officers of General Gage's army; that the town of Lexington by these means was alarmed, and a company of the inhabitants muftered on the occasion; " that the regular troops on their way to Concord marched into the faid town of Lexington, and the faid company on their approach began to difperfe; that notwithstanding this the regulars rushed on with great violence, and first began hostilities by firing on the faid Lexington company, whereby they killed eight and wounded feveral others; that the Regulars continued their fire until those of said company who were neither killed nor wounded, had made their escape; that Col. Smith with the detachment then marched to Concord, where a number of Provincials were again fired on by the troops, two of them killed, and feveral wounded, before any of the Pravincials fired on them; and that these hostile measures of the troops produced an engagement which lafted thro' the day, in which many of the Provincials and more of the Regular troops were killed and wounded.

To give a particular account of the ravages of the troops, as they retreated from Concord to Charles-town, would be very difficult, if not impracticable; let it suffice to say, that a great number of the houses on the road were plundered and rendered unfit for use, feveral were burnt, women in childbed were driven by the foldiery naked into the streets, old men peaceably in their houses were shot dead, and fuch scenes exhibited as would diffrace the annals of the most unciviliz'd nations.

These, brethren, are marks of ministerial vengeance against this colony, for refusing, with her fifter colonies, a submission to slavery; but they have not yet detached us from our Royal Sovereign; we profess to be his loyal and dutiful subjects; and so hardly dealt with as we have been, are still ready with our lives and fortunes to defend his perfon, family, crown, and dignity; neverthelefs, to the perfecution and tyranny of his cruel ministry, we will not tamely submit; appealing to heaven for the juttice of our caufe, " we determine to die or be free."

We cannot think that the honour, wisdom and valour of Britons will fuffer them to be longer inactive spectators of measures in which they themselves are so deeply interested; Measures pursued in opposition to the folemn protests of many noble Lords, and the expressed sense of conspicuous Commons, whose knowledge and virtue have long characterized them as some of the greatest men in the nation; measures executing contrary to the interest. petitions, and resolves of many large, respectable counties, cities, and boroughs in Great Britain; measures highly incompatible with justice, but still pursued with a specious pretence of easing the nation of its burthens; measures which, if successful, must end in the ruin and slavery of Britain, as well as the perfecuted American Colonies.

We fincerely hope that the great Sovereign of the universe, who hath so often appeared for the English nation, will support you in * There were 100 Provincials and 900 Regulars.

every rational and manly exertion with these colonies for faving it from ruin, and that in a constitutional connection with our mother country, we shall foon be altogether a free and happy people.

Signed by Order, JOS. WARREN, Prefident.

The London Gazette of Tuefday, May 30, contains the following paragraph:

Secretary of State's Office, Whitehall, May 30.

" A report having been spread, and an account having been printed and published, of a skirmish between some of the people in the province of Maffachufets Bay and a detachment of his Majesty's troops; it is proper to inform the public, that no advices have as yet been received in the American department of any fuch event,--There is reason to believe, that there are dispatches from General Gage on board the Sukey, Captain Brown, which, though the failed four days before the veffel that brought the printed account, is not yet arrived.

MARRIED.

The Earl of Lincoln, eldest fon of the Duke of Newcastle, to the Hon. Miss Conway, daughter of the Earl of Hertford.

The Right Hon. Lord Boston, to Miss Me-thuen, only daughter of Paul Methuen, Esq; of Corsham, Wilts.

Major-General Henry Campbell, of Boquhan, to Miss Mary Crawfurd, eldest daughter of Sir Hew Crawfurd, Bart.

James Barber, Efq; of Upway in Dorfetshire, to Mis Simons, of Sackville-freet.

Thomas Leigh, Efq; of the Queen's light-dragoons, to Mis Fanny Leighton, youngest daughter of the late Gen. Leighton Charles Baldwyn, Efg; Knight of the Shite for Salop, to Mrs. Paimer, a widow lady. At Bath, Wm. Brodie, Efg; to Mifs Afheton Smith, eldeft daughter of the late Thomas Afheton Smith, Fig. of Afhety in Chefbire.

Asheton Smith, Etq; of Asheley in Cheshire. Henry Hobhouse, Etq; counsellor at law, of Cliston, to Miss Jenkins, of Wells.

Rev. John Gutch, M. A. to Miss Eliza Weller. of Oxford.

ler, of Oxford. At Whitchurch, Hants, Capt. Cole, to Miss

Polly Hayter.

The Rev. Thomas Pentycrofs, rector of St. Mary's, Wallingford, to Mifs Allen, of Prefton-Crowmarfh, Oxon.

John Lea, Efq; to Mifs Elizabeth Fisher, of Limpley-Stoke, Wilts.

Brackley Kennet, Efq; of Pall-Mall, to Mrs.

Smith, near Cheltenham, Glocestershire. William Gooch, Efq; fecond fon of Sir Tho. Gooch, Bart. of Benacre-Park, to Miss Villa Real.

At Fareham, **** Abborow, Efq; to Miss Hammond, of Winchester. Robert Duke, Efq; to Miss Rashleigh, daughter of the late Jonathan Rashleigh, Esq; of Wickham, Hants.

The Rev. Herman Drewe, rector of Wootton-Fitzpaine, Dorfet, to Mis Hatherly, only daughter of the Rev. William Hatherly, vicar of Colyton, Devon.

Tho. Blackmore, Efq; of Briggins in Herts, to Mis Borman, of Maidtone.

Mr. Nicholas Phipps, mercer, in Fleet-street, to Miss M. Adderley, of Doctors Commons.

In P Du Of a vefi gen of 1 Vit Sir I Sur fuc

177 nov Dr. aut and ()f a D. cati The Age Bul At V

Miss Rev At E Rev. ney Jame the Dy a ran

At S

on

At E

The

alde

eft Dr. hof late Rob John arm Age pre

Mrs.

ter

Ha At N av peo At 7 the At Ra of : ol At E

Win fhir Ris At I Of :

in l

201 Mrs thefe tina other a free

NE,

dent. ay 30, ay 30. in aced, of in the etach-roper

have part-

reason

from

aptain

r days

ed ac-

Duke

nway, s Me-

, Efq; uhan,

ter of tfhire.

light-ungest

Shire

ady.

fheton

homas

eshire.

w, of

Wel-

Mis

of St.

en, of er, of Mrs.

re. Tho.

Miss

Mis

laugh-fq; of

Woottherly,

therly,

Herts,

Areet,

nons.

Sir Francis Vincent, of Stoke D' Abernon, Surry, Bart Member for the county.—He is fucceeded in title and estate by his eldest fon, now Sir Francis Vincent, Bart.

Dr. Nich. Robinson, an eminent physician, author of feveral valuable treatifes in physic and philosophy.

E

In Privy Gardens, Whitehall, her Grace the

of a fit of coughing, which burst a blood vessel, the Hon. James Boscawen, lieutenant general of his Majesty's land forces, colonel of the 24th reg. of foot, and brother to Lord

D

Duchels of Montague.

Viscount Falmouth.

Of an apoplectic fit, the Rev. Tho. Curteis, D. D. one of the prebendaries of Canterbury cathedral, rector and vicar of Sevenoaks.

The Hon, Henry Grimstone.

Aged $4, Mrs. Bullock, reliet of the late Dr. Bullock, Dean of Norwich.

At Wallingford, in the 77th year of his age, Mr. Richard Toovey, attorney, and fenior alderman of that corporation

Miss Hollings, eldest daughter of the late Rev. Mr. Hollings, vicar of Ledbury. At Builth in Breconfhire, Mrs. Price, relict of John Price, E(q; of Hendrey in that county. Rev. Richard Keeble, rector of Newton-Toney in Wiltshire.

Mrs. Geary, reliet of Admiral Geary. James Lee, Efq; formerly a commander in the East-India Company's fervice.

By a fall from his horfe, Mr. Starling, infurance-broker, Lombard-street.
At Salt-hill, William Neate, Esq; merchant, on St. Mary-hill. At Bath, the Hon. George Hamilton.

The Right Hon. Lady Sophia Lambert, eld-eft daughter of the Earl of Cavan.

Dr. Greene, one of the chaplains to Chelfea hospital

At Brighthelmstone, Humphry Cotes, Esq; late candidate for Westminster.

Robert Ireland, Efq; an agent for the army John Cresset, Esq; joint comptroller of the army accounts, Aged 72, the Rev. Samuel Holcombe, M. A. prebendary of Winchester, and rector of Severn Stoke.

Mrs. Catharine Maria Bearcroft, eldest daughter of the late Sir William Compton, of Hartbury, Bart. At Newport-Pagnell, aged 83, Mrs. Tandy, a widow gentlewoman, eminent among the people called Quakers.

At Tavistock, Richard Turner, Efq; clerk of the peace for Devon.

At Wilcraft, near Hereford, Mr. Edward
Rawlins: The bulk of his fortune, upwards of 28,000l. he has left to his nephew, Mr. John Ravenhill.

At Breem in Glocestershire, Mr. John Keare, in his 107th year.

Mr. Anthony Paine, mercer, in Stroud.
Wm. Bankes, Efq; of Wynftanley in Lancathire: He married the eldeft daughter of the Right Hon. Sir Wm. Meredith. At Dublin, Dr. Rutty, an eminent physician; and the Hon. Arthur Dawfon, late a baron of the Exchequer.

Of an apoplexy, **** Nevels, Efq; of Cur-Mrs. Wright, wife of A. Wright, Efq; banker.

Aged 63, Rev. John West, A. M. rector of Mepal, and vicar of Sutton in the Isle of Ely. The Rev. Mr. Samuel Philips, some years fince minister of the gospel at Poole in Dorfettibire.

In his 24th year, Mr. Joseph Gape, merchant of Cheapfide.

Mr. Carleton, in partnership with Mess. Dorrien and Ruckers, bankers, in Finch-lane. Dr. Burton, chaunter of Exeter cathedral. At Woodford in Effex, Rich. Warner, Efq; a gentleman well known in the literary world. At the Lodge, in Breconfine, Lady williams, mother to Sir Edward Williams, Bart.

Suddenly, the Rev. Mr. Kays, of Wickwar. Tho. Walmfley, Efg. fleward to Ld Verrie. Rev. Mr. Westcott, senior priest-vicar of Exeter cathedral.

Anthony Burleton, Efg; of Shaftefbury. Mrs. Saintloe, reliet of the late John Saintloe, Efq; a rear admiral of his Majerry's navy. George Quarme, Ffq; one of his Majefly's commissioners of excise.

The Rev. Mr. Symons, at Swanfea. John Shakespear, Esq; alderman of Aldgate. Ward.

Aged 69, Mr. Alderman Austin, an eminent inercer, of Oxford. In his facth year, Francis Waftie, Efq. high theriff for Oxfordshire in the year 1770 John Luxford, Efq; late an eminent whole-fale grocer, in the borough. At Greenwich, the Rev. Mr. Thomas.

Rev. Mr. Nott, one of the minor canons of Worcester cathedral, and rector of St. Martin in Worcester. At Southampton, Capt. Clatworthy Thackftone.

William Jones, Efq; of Nass. At Glocester, aged 82, Mrs. Stock, a widow lady, who, thro' the whole course of her life, had never eat any animal food.

The Hon. Mifs Johnston, one of her Majesty's maids of honour, and daughter of Governor Johnston.

At Southampton, Mrs. Lifle, widow of John Lifle, Efq. late of Moiles court.

Aged 92, the Hon. Mr. Montague, uncle to the of Earl Sandwich.

Rev. Mr. Milburne, rector of Rawreth, Effex. Mr. George Drummond, of Craig's-court, Charing-crofs.

The Rev. Dr. Crufius, prebendary of Worcef-ter and Brecknock, rector of Shobdon in Herefordinire, and St. John's near Worcester. At Scarhorough, Mr. William Allason, aged 104, late governor of the Spa, in which station he lived for the last 30 years.

At Bath, Mirs. Mary Calvert, fifter to John Calvert, Efq; member for Hertford. At Bath, Capt. John Conyngham.

ECCLESIASTICAL PREFERMENTS.
The Rev. Dr. Wheeler, to the chancellorship of the diocefe of Oxford.

Rev. Thomas Fothergill, D. D. to the fifth prebend in the cathedral church of Durham. Rev. John Chefter, to the vicarage of Lye in Glocestershire.

Rev. Edmund Dana, clerk, M. A. to the rectory of Afton Botterell in Shropshire. Rev. Francis Le Breton, to the deanry of Jersey. Rev. Mr. Le Couteur, to the living of St. Martin's in the fame island.

Rev. Nathan Wetherell, D. D. to the dignity of a canon or prebend in the collegiate church of St. Peter, Weithuinfter Edward Smallweil, clerk, to a canonry in Chriff-Church, Oxford, void by the death of Dr. John Tottie.

Rev. Mr Rooth Hewitt, to the vicarage of Califor in Lincolnthire

Rev. Matthew Kennick, to the rectory of Blechingly in Surry.

Rev. Mr. Huddesford, to the living of Lid in Kent.

Rev. William Griffin, M. A. to be facrist of Worcester cathedral, and minister of St. Michael in Bedwardine.

Rev. Mr. Coneybeare, fon of the late Bishop of Briftol, to the rectory of St. Botolph, Bithopgate-ttreet. Rev. Thomas Mostyn, M. A. to the rectories of Llanyckil in Merionethshire, and Christleton in Cheshire.

Rev. Mr. Deake, A. E. to the rectory of St. Bride, in Monmouthshire, with that of St. Athan in Glamorganshire.

Rev. Sulusbury Price, D. D. to the vicarage of Little Marlow in Bucks, with the rectory of Buckland in Surry. Rev. Wm. Webber, M. A. to hold the rectory of Selfey with that of Birdshaw in Sussex. Wm. Nance, to the vicarage of Boxley Rev. in Kent.

Tho. Hurit, B. L. to hold the rectory of Pickworth in Lincolnshire, with the rectory of Stanford in Nottinghamshire, Rev. Charles Cave, to the rectory of South Kitworth in Leicestershire.

Rev. Theophilus Proffer, to the rectory of Nova Villa Lupi, otherwise Wolf's Newton in Monmouththire.

Rev. Goodyear St. John was instituted and inducted into the parish church of Mottis-font in Hants, by virtue of a writ issued to the Bishop, in consequence of the final determination of the House of Lords, concerning the prefentation to that living.

The Bishop of Exeter has given the vicarage of Feock in Cornwall, to the Rev. Mr. John · John Seccombe.

CIVIL and MILITARY PROMOTIONS. Gen. Irwin, to be commander in chief of his Majesty's forces on the Irish establishment. Colonel Mocher, to be colonel of the 11th regiment of dragoons. Thomas Bull, Efq; to be collector of the Dor-fet collection, in the room of the late Wm. Hawksworth, Esq.

George Garrick, Efq; to be lieutenant of the yeomen of the guard.
**** Parker, Efg; Exon to the yeomen of ** Parker, Eiq; Exon to the yeomen of the guard.

Lieut. Gen. John Irwin, to be commander in chief of all his Majesty's land forces in Ireland; also to be governor of Londonderry and Calmore Fort, and to be one of his Majefty's most hon, privy council in Ireland.

The Right Hon. James Montgomery, Efq; member for Peebleshire, to be judge advocate of Scotland.

Lieut. Col. Egerton, to be lieutenant-governor of the Scilly islands, in the room of Gen. Boscawen, deceased.

Mr. Heath, town-clerk of Exeter, to be one of the King's ferjeants at law.

From the London Gazette, May 27. AVERAGE PRICES of CORN, From May 15, to May 20, 1775.

By the Standard Winchester Bushel of 8 Gall.

ftone

Epit

them has :

wher

have varn

men.

won to fi defic

in ce

that infer

the

ract

Deb

his

ous

the

ble :

ble

WOU

N

From May 8, to May 13, 1775.

WALES. North Wales 6 8 5 1 3 6 1 9 4 South Wales 6 7 5 2 3 6 1 7 3

Part of SCOTLAND. Wheat. Rye. Barley. Oats. Beans. Eig. 9 2 9 2 1 3 0 2 1 3 Published by Authority of Parliament W. COOKE.

PRICE of STOCKS, May 30. Bank flock, 142 1. 4 per cent. con. 90 1 3 per cent. 1758, 80 4. 3 per cent. con. 88 4. 3 per cent. red. 87 8. 3 per cent. 1726, 3 per cent. 1726, India ftock, 154 1. India Bonds, 618 prem. South Sea ftock, —. Ditto old ann. —. Do. new ann. 87 $. Ditto 1751, -. Long Ann. 26. Navy bills, per cent, difc. Lottery Tickets 13l. 18.

BRANSCOMBE and Co. Stock-Brokers At their Lottery-Office, No. 5, Holbern.